opened fire with shotguns at a crowd in a black township outside Cape Town. In Soweto, the country's largest black urban area, a white schoolteacher and 10 black students were wounded by police shotgun fire and several hundred students were arrested.

The proposed abolition of the socalled "pass laws" and "influx control act," following Wednesday's statement by President Pieter W. Botha that he would move to restore citizenship to blacks in the nominally independent homelands, has led to cautious optimism from some critics of apartheid.

But the move faces several hurdles before enactment and analysts noted that Mr. Botha's government could back away if it perceived a significant backlash from its conservative white constituency. The government faces five white parliamentary by-elections next month.

This could be a nail in the coffin of apartheid," said John Kane-Berman, director of the South African Institute of Race Relations, "But I will believe the pass laws are being abolished when an act of Parliament with P.W. Botha's signature on it hits my desk. There have been too many false dawns before."

Black Sash civil rights group that counsels blacks facing legal action under the pass laws, sounded a the legal ban on squatters, but it more optimistic note. "We've proposed vast new housing tracts crossed some sort of watershed," for blacks seeking access to South she said. Referring to Mr. Botha's statement Wednesday and Thursday's recommendation, she added, "We've taken two giant steps."

The U.S. ambassador, Herman Nickel, appearing on the state-run national television network, described the pass laws and influx control or "manhable in the daily control as probably in the daily lives of SA blacks the single most dehumanizing aspect of the sys-

"If that can be brought to an end," Mr. Nickel said, "and of course thus far we are only dealing with a recommendation, I think it would be regarded as a positive

In Washington, the State Department spokesman, Bernard Kalb, said the suggestion to abolish the pass laws "is very important to black South Africans and we find it encouraging that the South African government is apparently reviewing its policies in this area," The Associated Press reported

[Also, in Washington, Reuters reported that Senate Democrats emporarily gave up their fight to South Africa than President Ronald Reagan's curbs but vowed to try again at a later date. For the third time this week, the Senate failed to end a filibuster that prevents final action on the sanctions bill. The vote Thursday was 88 to Restrictions on black movemen are only one aspect of the apartheid system, but they have been singled out over the years by critics as one of the most pernicious. The laws have been responsible for separating hundreds of thousands of black workers from their families, who in many cases are not allowed to join them in urban areas.

The abolition of the laws was recommended in a report by a committee of the 60-member President's Council, a statutory body that makes formal recommendations to Parliament. Its members are appointed by Mr. Botha.

The council took up the report in a meeting Thursday in Cape Town and its chairman, Piet Koomboff, said that he expected quick approval for the proposals by the council, which has no black members. No dates were recommended for ending the pass laws.

The report called for "orderly urbanization" and would not lift

Nicaragua Tells World Court That U.S. Directs Insurgents

By William Drozdiak

THE HAGUE - Nicaragua fornally charged Thursday that the U.S. National Security Council is guiding strategy and choosing the military targets of the guerrillas who are striving to overthrow the Sandinist government.

Carlos Arguello Gómez, Nicaragua's chief counsel and ambaseador to the Netherlands, contended that after President Ronald Reagan acknowledged in February that the Sandinists from power, the Reagan administration has assumed an every greater role in orlas, known as the contras.

Mr. Arguello, speaking before the International Court of Justice at the start of bearings against the United States, said that his country would produce witnesses and documents before the tribunal "to prove beyond a doubt that the U.S. government has set justice aside and is guilty of state terrorism."

On April 9, 1984, Nicaragua charged the United States with conducting paramilitary accordies against Nicaragua in violation of international law and United Nations and Organization of American States provisions.

The court, which is also known as the World Court, ruled last November that it held jurisdiction and would hear the merits of the case. and the United States announced in January a boycott of the proceedings. Washington had argued in vain that Nicaragua had never previously recognized the court's authority and now was seeking to exploit the forum for political propaganda purposes.

Asserting that "the seat of justice is definitely empty in the United States," Mr. Arguello told the court's 14 judges, "Your authority is being challenged by a superpower that wishes to set law aside in order to have a free hand for destroying a small nation." Despite the absence of U.S. legal representatives, Nicaragua will not be awarded the case by default and must persuade the court of the validity of its claims. If the court ultimately decides in its favor. Nicaragua will then seek financial compensation for the damage inflicted by anti-Sandinist forces...

Presenting Nicaragua's arguments, Mr. Argüello said, "Recent revelations prove beyond doubt that the U.S. National Security Council is responsible for the direction of mercenary forces.

"This council, headed by the president of the United States, directs the strategy and even selects the targets to be destroyed by the mercenary forces." Mr. Arguello charged that White

U.K. Expels Russians After KGB Defection

By R.W. Apple Jr.

LONDON — Britain ordered the expulsion of 25 Soviet officials on Thursday. The order followed the defection of the chief agent in Britain of the KGB, the Soviet intelligence organization.

The Foreign Office said the order was issued on the basis of information provided by Oleg A. Gor-dievsky, 46. who had been granted political asylum. Of the people whom he named as members of the Soviet spy network in Britain, six were diplomats, seven were trade representatives, five were journalists and seven filled a variety of other positions at the embassy and in other London offices.

At a regular briefing, a Foreign Office spokesman said the 25 had engaged in activities totally in-compatible with their status and declared tasks." They were given three weeks to leave.

Correspondents for Tass, the Soviet press agency, for Novosti, the features agency, and for Radio Moscow were on the expulsion list. So were translators at two international organizations and a driver and security guard at the embassy.

Not since 105 Soviet officials home in 1971 has there been such a mass expulsion from Britain. In April of this year, five officials. including the Soviet Embassy's naval attaché, were expelled on spying charges. The Russians retaliated by expelling three members of WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration has dismissed Mikhail S. Gorbachev's endorsement of a proposal for the creation of a zone in central Europe free of all chemical weapons.

The U.S. administration said Wednesday that the Soviet leader's acceptance of the plan agreed to by East Germany and the opposition Social Democratic Party in West Germany "was a repackaging of proposals we have heard before,"

Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said such a limited chemical ban could not be adequately verified. He said the call for prohibiting chemical weapons in central Europe was similar to a 1983 Warsaw Pact proposal that urged a ban on stockpiling and pro-

LONDON - in the vast expanses of deteriorating public housing and small shops of London's East End and other British cities, alarm has been growing over attacks on Asians and in July a pregnant Asian woman and her three small children were burned to death in their East End home in a fire that the police say was arson. Last month, police officers rescued nine members of a Bengali family, including an infant, trapped in their apartment after gasoline was poured through their front door and set after, and four people were injured in what the police described as an arson attack on an Indian restaurant in South London.

Although Asians - mostly people of Indian and Pakistani descent — seem to be the most frequent targets, blacks and lews have also fallen victim. In Woolwich in late June, a black woman and her two daughters were beaten and spat upon by a busload of passengers who chanted in unison, "Niggers off," and that same month three rabbis were attacked and beaten in North London. Jewish schoolchildren also have been attacked. The police say there were 691 racial incidents in the first six months of this year in Greater public housing where residents say they feel London, a rate slightly down from last year's they live in a state of siege. More than 200 that the hypothesis is far-fetched. The SCOPE study assumes that a nuclear war would involve only half the nuclear warheads of the United States and the Soviet Union, that their use would set fire to about 25 to 30 percent of the urban areas of North America, Europe and the Soviet Union.

According to the study, much of the smoke would rise above weather zones and enter the stratosphere, the highest layer of air.

Within days, dense patches of smoke would block 99 percent of the sunlight, and within a few weeks, the patches would spread, blanketing the entire northern hemisphere enough to block 90 percent of light.

The freeze would be worst inland because coastal temperatures would be moderated by the stillwarm oceans. The study also suggests that a drought could follow for some weeks or months and that normal weather patterns would be disrupted, eliminating the normal monsoon rains upon which Asia and Africa depend for agriculture. Dr. Harwell said that slight

Pentagon Fights a Flood Of Illegally Leaked Data To Military Contractors

By Howard Kurtz and Fred Higgs

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — When Representative Joseph P. Addabbo asked the U.S. Navy why it needed ing airplanes, the New York Demo-crat was told the information was classified and could not be given to Congress because it might leak out. A few days later, however, Mr. Addabbo received the navy data he was looking for - in an unsolicited letter from Lockheed Corp., the manufacturer of the planes.

In Philadelphia, 20 defense contractors and Pentagon employees have been charged so far in a wideranging scheme in which confidential bidding information was given to the companies in exchange for cash kickbacks. More indictments are expected.

In another case, an executive fired by McDonnell Douglas Corp. has accused the company in a civil suit of corrupt practices, including the improper acquisition of military documents and lax handling of classified material. McDonnell Douglas, the largest U.S. defense contractor, denied the charges, saying they were not corroborated by its own investigation.

Concerns about unauthorized disclosures were underscored Tuesday when a GTE Corp. subsidiary, a retired air force major and two other persons were charged with conspiring to obtain classified documents on electronic-warfare contracts that the company was seek-

GTE agreed to plead guilty to the charges and to pay $590,000 in legal costs and fines.

After the Lockheed incident occurred in 1983, it was later examined by the Defense Department's inspector general. Representative Addabbo, chairman of a House defense appropriations subcommittee, wanted to know why the navy planned to buy new P-3 airplanes rather than refurbishing old ones.

Although the navy refused to answer the congressmen's classified questions. Lockheed was eager to justify the purchases and sent Mr. Addabbo a reply that contained nine pages of confidential information, as well as the subcommittee's own unedited and unpublished hearing transcripts. The inspector general's report blamed the incident on the "close working relationship" between navy and Lockheed officials. "A violation of security regulations may have occurred and the contractor may have obtained an unfair advantage over the govern-ment," it said.

A Lockheed spokesman, Nick Duretta, said a navy inquiry found that the company had not violated any laws or regulations.

The 20 convictions at the Defense Industrial Supply Center in Philadelphia involve part of the $600 million the yard spends each year on spare parts. Richard Seaman of the Defense Procurement Fraud Unit said the eight convicted Pentagon employees exploited the fact that only three bidders are required on the smaller procurements. After receiving the first two unsealed bids, Mr. Seaman said, the agents would leak the prices to a third competitor, who would win the contract by submitting a slightly lower bid.

"It was extremely widespread," Mr. Seaman said. "It became a way of life out there." He said the "going rate" for kickbacks was 5 percent of the contract value.

43 Are Killed in Collision Of 2 Trains in Portugal

VISEU, Portugal - An eastbound express train carrying hundreds of migrant workers to France slammed head-on into a westbound local train in the mountains of central Portugal late Wednesday. At least 43 persons died in the burning wreckage. Earlier estimates had put the death toll much higher. More than 100 persons were injured, reports

The seven-coach express. bound from the coastal city of Oporto to Hendaye, France, was behind schedule and did a siding, the Portuguese news agency ANOP quoted railroad officials as saying.

The wrecked coaches upped off the rails and burst into flames. "People were being burned alive shouting jumping from the carriages and dying at the train windows," said Duarte.
Santos Correia, 37, one of the ANOP had earlier reported that more than 100 persons died. But the news agency Noticias de Portugal quoted Prime Minister Mário Soares on Thursday as saying that the early figures were exaggerated.

Glemp Disputes Polish Regime's Claim That Church Backs October Elections he had not heard of any alleged plans for attacks on churches.

By Robert Gillette

Los Angeles Times Service
WARSAW — Poland's Roman Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, has dismissed a claim by the government authorities that the church is lending silent support to national parliamentary elections

Leaders of the outlawed Solidarity trade union have called for a boycott of the election, and some radical priests have implicitly endorsed the protest in sermons. Voter turnout at the Oct. 13 elections of the Communist-controlled Sejm, Poland's parliament, is viewed as a test of strength between the government and the opposition. The assertion of silent church support for the elections was made tion. last week by Deputy Interior Minister Wladyslaw Pozoga in the that it plans no contacts with Gen-Communist Party newspaper Try- eral Wojciech Jaruzelski, the Polish

U.S. Fears Lax Security At Bases in Philippines

By Bill Keller New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - U.S. military bases in the Philippines are poorly protected and are extremely vulnerable to terrorist attack, according to a U.S. Senate report sent to Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger this week.

The report by an investigator for the Senate subcommittee responsible for military construction said that last month navy officers detected an armed band of the New People's Army, the guerrilla army of the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines, camping inside the jungle-covered outer perimeter of Subic Bay Naval Base within a mile and a haif of a U.S. Navy ammunition magazine.

At Clark Air Base, the investiga-tor said, he found that the fences had been stripped by thieves and the perimeter guard towers had been abandoned by Philippine Army guards. One tower was being used by local children. "Clark and Subic. especially Clark, appear to be very vulnerable should the NPA shift tactics and begin to target U.S. bases," said the report, which was forwarded to Mr. Weinberger by Senator Jim Sasser, a Democrat of Tennessee. "Clark and Subic are the United States's Achilles' heel in the Philippines." A Defense Department official confirmed Wednesday that Pentagon officials were increasingly wor-ned about lax security, especially at Clark. But the official said efforts to increase security were hampered by the tight budgets and poor orga-nization of the Philippine military, which has much of the responsibility for base security.

The official said that Admiral on the American bases. William J. Crowe Jr., commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific region, was pressing for better fortifications and for organizational immilitary bases outside of the Unit of U.S. forces in the Pacific region, Chiefs of Staff on Oct. 1.

"Two, their growth continues and they see victory in their grays." and they see victory in their grasp, then an attack on Clark or Subjectual be a sign of how confident

The Senate report said U.S. Ma-rine patrols had recently been sent into the outer perimeter of Subic to compensate for slack Philippine protection.

It warned: The potential for U.S. troops and NPA guernillas to become engaged in a violent confrontation is all too apparent."...

Torture in South Africa Widespread, Study Says

By Glenn Frankel JOHANNESBURG - Physical and psychological torture of political detainees is used "systematically on a widespread basis" in South África, according to a report by the University of Cape Town. The study, released Wednesday, reportedly took two and a half years and included interviews with 176 former detainees. It said 83 percent reported some form of physical torture while in custody, while almost the entire sample reported being subjected to psycho-

In 1982, Louis Le Grange, the minister of law and order, issued a set of directions on the humane treatment of prisoners that includthe report said toat Mr. Le Grange's directions were "filled with provisos and escape clauses" and were not legally binding.

So far this year nearly 2,700 people have been detained under emergency regulations decreed by the government in July. The report es-timates that more than 300 others have been held under other statutes, including South Africa's sweeping Internal Security Act. Under that law, detainees can be held indefinitely without charge or access to lawyers or family.

Sixty persons have died while in detention since 1963, according to the Detainees' Parents Support Committee, an opposition human rights group in Johannesburg, which said that 14 others have died since 1977 while in police custody.

The report was compiled by two researchers for the Institute of Criminology at the university, considered one of South Africa's most prestigious.

Of those detainees who said they were tortured, 75 percent reported beatings, including punches, kicks and slaps as well as blows from a variety of implements. Fifty percent said they were forced to crouch or stand on their toes for prolonged periods, 25 percent said they were had been subjected to electric shock, and 18 percent to choking. Fourteen percent said their bodies had been suspended in various forms

Fifteen percent of the detainees said they had been chained or manacled for prolonged periods, 5 per-cent said their hair had been pulled, 3 percent said the soles of their feet were beaten and 3 percent reported abuse of their genitals.

It also accused authorities of widespread use of psychological torture, including false accusations, solitary confinement, verbal abuse and threats of violence.

The research sample was made up of 127 blacks, 36 persons of mixed-race or Asian origin and 13 whites. The average period of de-tention was three to four months and about half said they had been

Efficient, and safe

Ozone-'superoxygen'-isused in water treatment as a powerful and safe oxidizing agent that deals effectively with germs, viruses, odours, discolouration and other impurities.

BBC ozone generators were chosen for the new San Fernando Valley treatment plant after a severe evaluation of such factors as ozone concentration, output, efficiency, space requirements, maintenance needs, and price.

The plant's five ozone generators incorporate Brown Boveri electronic control equipment and produce an impressively high ozone concentration of 6%, or 88 g/m³. With pure oxygen as the feedstock, the combined output is 185 kg of ozone per hour.

With the help of Brown Boveri technology the new facility will treat more than 100 000 m³ of surface water per, hour. To pro-

As well as supplying highly specialized components and control systems to help meet such vital needs as drinking water and effluent treatment, Brown Boveri play a major role in providing the world with facilities for generating, distributing and utilizing electricity. Whether as main contractor, as head of a consortium, consortium member or supplier of equipment, Brown Boven are there. Accepting the challenge of the different, the complex and the newevery day and everywhere. And with their worldwide resources committed to the attainment of technical excellence in joint enterprise with others, Brown Boveri know how.

Protection and Party Lines

president is willing to support some form of trade legislation establishes where the real debate on trade is going on: within the Republican Party. The Democrats have advanced some get-tough-on-trade bills. But the Democrats are just making gestures. The Republicans could end up making policy.

Leading the opponents of trade restriction are enthusiastic supply-siders such as Representative Jack Kemp. Mr. Kemp comes from Buffalo, an old steel-mill town that was one of the few metropolitan areas to support the tough-on-trade stance of Walter Mondale. Mr. Kemp believes the economy would bloom if only government restrictions and penalties, such as taxes and tight-money policies and trade barriers, were stripped away. Protectionism may help establish industries in the short term, but free trade helps existing and potential industries in the long term.

But for the moment Mr. Kemp and those who agree with him — and they have long seemed to include the president — are on the defensive. Congressmen returning from recess have been hearing plenty from constituents who are convinced current trade rules are hurting them: businessmen fearful of foreign competition, workers concerned about losing jobs, local politicians concerned about estab-

Donald Regan's announcement at a meeting with Republican congressional leaders that the personally and through their political consultants, about what trade can do in 1986 for the Democrats: It gives them for the first time in years an issue on which their posture is aggressive and nationalistic, and on which they have a chance to recoup the vast number of white male votes they have lost over the years.

So it is not a coincidence that the most articulate Republican proponent of trade restriction is the political analyst Kevin Phillips. He and others, including a number of Republican politicians, see the supply-siders as too theoretical and ignorant of the way the world works, economically and politically. They believe Joe Sixpack is demanding tough action, and they want the Republican Party to deliver at least some tough rhetoric, as it has on foreign policy, crime and racial quotas.

It was to them that Mr. Regan was respond-ing Tuesday, to them that Majority Leader Robert Dole was responding when he said that the Senate may well pass trade restrictions, and to them that President Reagan will be responding if and when he advances the kind of trade initiative Mr. Regan promised. That would be too bad. This is one issue on which the president's tendency to stick to a course despite the complaints and dire predictions of others has generally served the nation well.

Voting Rights: A New Battle

President Reagan, who won by a landslide in 1980 and 1984, lost another kind of voting battle by another kind of landslide in 1982. That is when Congress, despite his opposition. voted overwhelmingly to strengthen the Voting Rights Act. The votes, 389 to 24 in the House and 85 to 8 in the Senate, so buried the opposition that Mr. Reagan reluctantly signed the bill rather than have his veto overridden. Now the administration seeks to win in the Supreme Court what it lost in Congress. In a case from North Carolina, it has asked the justices to interpret the law in precisely the ways Congress rejected so resoundingly.

It is not even a partisan initiative; other Republicans rush to dissociate themselves from it. Senator Robert Dole, the majority leader, and others who guided the voting bill to passage have responded with their own brief urging the Supreme Court not to trim the law to administration specifications. Such a brief dramatizes the administration's estrangement from civil rights, mainstream politics and the bipartisan national sense of electoral justice that inspired the 1982 law.

The law arose because of a 1980 Supreme Court ruling that anyone trying to challenge state voting rules had to prove discriminatory intent on the part of state lawmakers. Gerrymanders and other devices could nullify the growing black vote, yet showing they were intended to discriminate was not practical.

Consider a typical tactic, the multi-member election district. Smaller districts might enable black neighborhoods to elect candidates of their choice. Submerging those populations within large areas with white majorities meant that fewer or no blacks would be elected. But who could prove a discriminatory motive? Congress did not outlaw at-large districts or any other voting practice. It said they were invalid if, based on all the evidence, the political process was "not equally open" to minorities. Electoral success or lack of it was to be one of the criteria, but the law disavowed any minority right to representation in proportion to population — that is, no racial quotas.

In the North Carolina case a federal court weighed all the evidence, including a century of discrimination, and found that several atlarge districts violated the law. The Justice Department, joining the state's appeal, argued that since blacks have made gains in two recent elections — up from four legislators to 16 the lower court must have been using a forbidden quota as a yardstick.

Do a few victories for blacks exonerate North Carolina's practices? On its face, the 1982 law says no. Congress made clear in the law and committee reports that, just as no single factor is enough to condemn a district-ing plan, no single factor exonerates it. Any other reading of the law would give greater weight to a handful of successes than to decades of unfair defeats, and under conditions that threaten to make them temporary.

The same Justice Department that tried to obstruct the bill has the nerve to ask the high court, in interpreting the law, to give more weight to the views of Senator Ortin Hatch, leader of the eight senators who opposed it, than to those of Mr. Dole and the 84 other senators who voted for it. The Department characterizes them as a "faction.

Ignoring the usual canons for construing statutes, the Justice Department must strain to read the law the way it does. For the administration to insist on straining is to flout what Mr. Dole and his "faction" know: Decency and fairness to underrepresented minorities is always, regardless of party, the best politics.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES

Other Opinion

Apartheid: Pressure, Response

President Pieter Botha's restoration of citizenship, second class, to millions of black South Africans will be welcome — like President Reagan's sanctions proposals - more for the direction the government is moving than for the reforms themselves. The measures will enrage his disaffected right wing in advance of this month's important by-elections, while meeting none of the immediate demands of black leaders. But it would be quite wrong to dismiss (the) changes as unimportant simply because they will have little immediate impact.

Mr. Botha has dismantled the ideological basis of apartheid, the repugnant concept of extraterritorial citizenship under which all blacks were deemed to have been citizens of the homelands even if they did not live there. It is this travesty that enabled whites to delude themselves they were living in a democracy. Mr. Botha has been pressurized into making an historic intellectual volte-face. To the black South African, dodging riot squads in the homelands, this is, understandably, an argument about the depth of hell. But the objective of building a South Africa without blacks was not unequivocally refuted until Wednesday. — The Guardian (London).

President Reagan has acted more or less in line with the attitude of most Western governments. None is willing to jeopardize its real economic and commercial interests. Britain, with the largest stake, has already declared that it will not go beyond banning arms sales. - The Times of India (New Delhi).

If South Africa is not soon persuaded to institute legitimate reform, the tragedy will enter yet another phase: Blacks and whites will be fighting, and dying, in downtown Durban, Pretoria, Johannesburg, The United States must not simply sit back and watch it happen.

Behind Birmingham's Riots

Circumstantial evidence suggests that police investigations into drug trafficking among West Indians were a factor in the riots. If people in Birmingham or anywhere desire to see a main effort made against an accelerating epidemic of drug addiction, they must uphold the right of the police to inquire, to search and to apprehend. Ours is a remarkably tolerant society. But tolerance would be stretched were it to be seen that enforcement of law adopted the principle of reverse discrimination.

1910: Franklin on 'Free' Commerce PARIS - There appeared in the Herald [on Sept. 12] a letter commending the campaign being conducted against the new Customs regulations which, if enforced, will shut out foreign manufacturers of textiles and further squeeze the American consumer. The writer forwarded a copy of a letter written by Benjamin Franklin in 1783, when he was American Minister to France, to the French Minister of Foreign Affairs. Mr. Franklin presented complaints of American merchants who objected to the embarrassments which their trade with France was alleged to be suffering because of duties, searches, etc. Mr. Franklin added: "I would only observe that commerce, consisting in a mutual exchange of the necessaries and conveniences of life, the more free and unre-strained it is, the more it flourishes."

1935: Germany Faces Tariff Reprisals WASHINGTON - America's new policy of tariff reprisals against countries not according equal treatment to American products will be inaugurated Oct. 15 with the application of the highest scale of customs duties possible here against imports from Germany, according to information given out [on Sept. 12] in official circles. It is asserted that Secretary of State Cordell Hull has already informed Dr. Hans Luther, German Ambassador to the United States, of this decision. The date of Oct. 15 is mentioned because on this day the reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Germany expires. Negotiations for the conclusion of a new agreement are now in progress. American negotiators are insisting that the Germans abrogate their strict control ures regarding foreign trade.

A Besieged Reagan Turns to the Center

WASHINGTON — For months the Reagan administration bowied lickety-split down the well-worn path that leads from landslide to the crumbling of presidential power. Then, as Congress came back to town after Labor Day, a strategic retreat was executed.

row issues, it carries implications for the broadest elements of policy. And even though it may be merely tactical, the new tilt marks a healthy move away from ideologues of the far right and toward the politics of the center. Franklin Roosevelt is Exhibit A. The huge victory of 1936 was followed by the ill-fated plan to pack the Supreme Court in 1937 and the fiasco when he tried to purge unsympathet-ic Democratic candidates in the 1938 elections. The rot was arrested only by the coming of war in 1939.

Lyndon Johnson went from landslide in 1964 to impotence in 1968. Richard Nixon covered the same ground from 1972 to his resignation in 1974, Mr. Reagan was well on the way to an equally dramatic decline.

His victory over Walter Mondale was followed by a change in the White House staff. The new team took the election as a license to move right. Mr. Reagan had followed an economic policy that favored growth by deficit spending while helping the rich through tax benefits. To that was added a tax reform plan that would have deepened deficits while preserving special benefits for the rich.

Social policy, in the first term, catered to rural whites of the South and West at the expense of urban blacks. In the second term there was added a vigorous attempt to undo programs favoring black employment, and to curtail health and educational approaches enacted at the behest of urban black leaders.

In foreign policy, the administration had emphasized a vast military buildup, and a stance of rhetorical toughness toward the Soviet Union and its proxies. To this there was added direct White House management of a guerrilla war against the Sandinist regime in Nicaragua and a stress on the "star wars" program iat ieodardized arms control.

But whatever the president and his staff was thinking, the country was not moving hard right. The majority rejected more deficits to benefit the rich; it opposed reversal of civil rights progress; it lost patience for a buildup that only increased tension.
With the 1986 elections in view, the Congress was especially sensitive to the broad popular mood. Democrats led the way, but Republicans felt pressure to outbid them. Together they fashioned from general public feelings a host of specific challenges to the administration.

came in with a 6-percent rise in mili-tary spending for next year, Congress cut it to zero. When the administration laughed off black-led protests against South African race policies Congress voted sanctions. Against administration economic policies While the pullback comes on nar-Congress brandished a hundred - protectionism; a soakthe-rich tax reform; even tax rises.

Talk of veto was the initial White House reaction. Far more than his predecessors. Mr. Reagan is weak on substance but blessed with an almost magical quality to muster popular support. He wins by winning; once beaten, the spell is broken. A Congress with its appetite whetted by the overturn of a Reagan veto would eat the rest of his authority for breakfast.

Faced with that prospect the presi-dent and some of his advisers pulled back. He pre-empted the Congress by invoking sanctions against South Africa. The Pentagon has cut out a mafor weapons system, an anti-aircraft gun. Trade officials announced pro-tectionist procedures to gain wider access for U.S. exports. Management weak, tardy and probably ineffective. The sanctions fell short of what Congress wanted and failed to include a

The Reagan administration's prevailing policy has been to support President Pieter W. Botha's approach.

But it is an approach that lags well behind the reality of the South African crisis. It is too late for black "moderates" to prevail. It is too late for concessions. It is too late for constructive engagement - even President Reagan's renamed policy of "active constructive engagement."

The white rulers of South Africa have hitherto refused to negotiate in ways that would have boosted the credibility of nonviolent leaders of South Africa such as Chief Gatsha Buthelezi and Bishop Desmond Tutu. By acrest-ing nearly all of the significant leaders of the multiracial United Democratic Front, the government has virtually of the anti-Sandinist guerrillas is being moved from the White House to the State Department. The Treasury pted a congressional stipulation that tax reform not end in revenue loss. Still more adjustments are likely in the tax field.

In that climate of compromise. Senate and House Republicans have softened their challenge to the White House. There now appears to be no chance of overturning a veto on South African sanctions. Even on trade, the veto pen looks like an ultimate weapon.

Many Democrats fume that the switch in signals reflects tactical adjustment rather than a sincere change of heart. No doubt President Reagan will concede as little as he has to Given half a chance he will return to the agenda of the far right. But if Congress remains vigilant, if it maintains the pressure, the White House will give way. Mr. Reagan would rather be powerful than right.

So the strategic retreat represents a true victory for the American politi-cal system. The rightist ideologues are on the defensive. The center is not only holding. It is gaining ground. Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

timism about the U.S. economy's prospects than the prevailing gloomy consensus would suggest.

This consensus is couched in forbidding pronouncements: "The trade deficit is an economic disaster." and, "No revival in sight for the industrial side of the economy."

One major reason we can be skep-tical about this dark view is that American economic problems either have been overstated or are susceptible to readily accessible remedies. Consider the three most widely cited problems: the two U.S. deficits - budget and trade - and the international debt problem.

The budget deficit, according to forecasts, will be about $200 billion in fiscal 1986. This imbalance is plainly undesirable. It is also not disabling First, the deficit should be viewed in conjunction with the pre-dicted budget surpluses of the states. This probably shrinks the consolidat-ed federal and state deficit for 1986 to about $170 billion or $180 billion.

Second, assuming the Senate and House can sustain, in the appropriations process, the modest spending-reductions already agreed to in set-ting their budget ceilings, the consoli-dated deficit will decline by $40 billion or $50 billion more. The consolidated 1986 deficit then shrinks to 3 percent to 3.5 percent of the gross national product. This is well below deficit ratios Japan has regularly exceeded while sustaining its high rates of economic growth during the past 10 years.

Next, consider the trade deficit—

$123 billion in 1984 and a predicted $140 billion this year. This is bound to be a transitory problem; to call it a "disaster" is an exaggeration.

The trade deficit arises from the fact that U.S. investment exceeds domestic savings. The deficit thus allows a higher level of investment hence, future growth and higher pro-ductivity — than would be feasible if the trade account were in balance at the present level of savings. The trade deficit has been accompanied by a high exchange value of the dollar rather than a declining one best hope of leverage on the policies of white South Africa to acknowledge. Moreover, the nature of the problem has altered dramatically, and South Africa has no other important friends or sources of psychological support.

Accordingly, if the rulers of South Africa are to be encouraged to focus on real rather than spurious solutions to their crisis, American decisiveness will be crucial.

This is not to argue that stronger sanctions would have been decisive of themselves. But this was plainly the moment to show Pretoria there is no external recourse.

Attempts to sustain the myth of constructive engagement will not lead to full-faith bargaining between blacks and whites. And the longer President Botha's regime ignores the issues dividing his nation, the harder it will be

SANTA MONICA, California — as would be expected. But this simply indicates investors have been more bullish about the U.S. economy than about other economies in which their nondollar assets were previously held. This accounts for their wish to hold more dollar assets, thereby bidding up the dollar's exchange value.

There is, moreover, an automatic mechanism that assures that the trade. deficit will be transitory. If and when American investment declines, or savings rise, or asset holders change, their obvious preference for dollar assets, the deficit will be reduced and eventually eliminated. The moderate decline in the dollar's value since March suggests a gradual adjustment process already has begun.
The third area of "crisis," the international debt problem, is also subject to more benign interpretations. It is

The real costs are the goods and services, commodities and machinery previously exported to debtor countries by the creditors These costs represent benefits for-gone by the creditors (principally the United States), because the labor, capital and materials needed to produce these goods were used for the benefit of external borrowers rather than for internal investment and consamption in the lending countries.

Consider, for example, how much, higher U.S. productivity would be it as significant share of the loans made in the 1970s to Latin America had risk stead financed investment, research and development in the United States, or if West European loans to the Soviet Union and Eastern European loans to the Easter had instead financed investment

the European Community.
The accounting problem arises because these debts are subject to wide ly differing repayment prospects, as suggested by discounts of 10 percent to 90 percent prevailing on the sec-ondary debt markets. If the commercial banks holding these assets have to revalue their balance sheets accordingly, bank losses will ensue.

However, so long as their net capi-tal, or shareholders' equity, remains even slightly positive — which can and would be assured by the Federal focusing on the adage popularized by Kwame Nkrumah: "Seek ye first the political kingdom and all else shall follow." A simple "one man, one vote," which whites naturally fear, is not yet the only rallying cry. There is still Reserve, as lender of last resort this adjustment will simply mean a reduction in some cases, a substantial one) in the market values of bank stocks. Shareholders of major banks would thus lose, although depositors would thus lose, although depositors would not But even if the share prices of these banks fell to single-digit values, there need be no great cal aspiration has been crossed, it will understand that itsis to shift publicly from constructive engagement to a tougher, more constructive policy that is less engaging. This is not merely a play on words. Official South Africa is much more susceptible to influence from Washington in a crisis than the White House has been prepared. stress for the economy as a whole.

That is the way markets work: The stockholders of these banks have experienced large profits and dividends in the past (their stocks have outperformed the market as a whole during the past 10 years); not unreasonably they may experience substantial losses in the future.

its neighbors. But should effectiveness be the only criterion of whether industrialized countries sell arms? Perhaps responsibility and political involvement should play a role. One thing is clear: The West, because it is not selling arms to Pretoria, is having a more open and honest debate about apartheid than otherwise would have been the case. Western politicians are less constrained by military and strategic concerns. This is to the good. Arms selling is a strange business.

Nothing is more perverse than the hold a buyer develops over a seller. Once a major power has entered into a selling relationship it becomes em-broiled with the buyer in an almost irrational way. Perhaps this should not be surprising. According to Lloyd Dumas, a professor of political economy at the University of Texas: "From 1960 to 1981 the less-developed nations spent roughly $1 trillion on their military. This enormous sum is difficult to comprehend. It would take a printing press printing $1,000 per second 10 years longer to print this much monThe main arms suppliers in the West and in the Soviet bloc are feeling increasing competition from an emerging group of Third World exporters, he notes. This group, led by Brazil, Taiwan and South Korea, "can now offer all but the most ultra-cophisticated weapons at threesophisticated weapons at knock-down prices," Mr. Dumas says. The pressures to keep one's markets are thus enormous.

And the arms trade is inevitably different from trade in cars or computers: A big customer not only drags the arms maker into an intimate relationship, it drags his government too. If there was ever any doubt about this it was laid to rest by the way the United States was maneuvered by the shah of Iran. For years, Iran was by far the largest recipient of U.S. arms, yet there was no carefully formulated American policy on these sales.

No one seriously asked what so-cial, economic and political strains were being created by the fact that Iran was spending a quarter of its budget on the military. Were the armed forces able to absorb all this sophisticated weaponry? What was the true nature of the security threat to Iran against which it had to undertake such an immense buildup? What would be the consequences for the other states of the region?

No one in the senior reaches of the U.S. government lost much sleep on these questions. The accepted view was the one the shah articulated that the United States had a major interest in a strong pro-Western Iran because of its strategic location. Arms sales would help ensure friendly relations with a major oil supplier. Henry Kissinger records that President Richard Nixon ordered that "in short, he defined the terms of the political relationship. In mid-1976 a Senate Foreign Relations subcom-mines concluded that U.S. arms sales to Iran were out of control. The following year they totaled $5.7 billion. Had there been no revolution, and had sales remained steady, Iran equipped air force. With so much money at stake there was little pressure in Washington to question the shah's police state, or to wonder what a successor regime would do with the arms it would inherit. The shah had America by the tail — so much so that he actually pushed for higher oil prices in councils of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

EW YORK - Photojournalism photography's most visible claim to fame as recently as 25 years ago — is back. Galleries and whose estensible interest in the medium is as a form of art, are turning their attention this fall to images made primarily for the sake of reportage, not personal expression. On the agenda are major retrospectives of the legendary careers of Robert Capa and W. each of whom has influenced today's photojournalistic style.

The renewed interest in photojournalism is mainly historical: most of the attention is being focused on work done in the 1930s,

40s and 50s. Nevertheless, it seems to reflect a new sense of vitality within the genre — and, possibly, a renewal of social consciousness throughout the culture. It also sciousness throughout the culture. It also reflects a growing dissatisfaction with the ability of so-called art photography to grapple with issues that are political, rather than aesthetic or psychological.

The shift is not without irony, however. The arena of art photography, which first seized center stage from photojournalism and now reseme ready to code it back reand now seems ready to cede it back, remains in control. For the shows and books we will be seeing are not photojournalism as a wellspring of artistic imagery. This revi-sionism is indisputably well-intended (artists have more cachet than reporters), but its effect is to alter — however slightly — the meanings of the pictures by re-contextualiz-ing them. In short, photojournalism is not displacing art photography. It is being incor-porated into the line-art fold, joining lashion advertising and topographic survey photography as subjects for scholarship and delec-

Indian Composer's Work, A Blending of Cultures, Opens New York Season

by Sue Armstrong

NE of the most appropriate aspects of the Festival of India in New York is that the New York Philharmonic should open its season with a work by Naresh Sohal - not only because Sohal is Indian-born, but because he is a man with deep roots in both Eastern and Western cultures, and with experiences that span the centuries from life in his grandfa-ther's Punjabi village to that of Western

Until he arrived in London at the age of 22, Sohal had never been to the West, yet it is as a composer of Western classical music that he has made his name. In a series of four concerts through next Tuesday, the Philharmonic under its music director, Zubin Mehta, will perform his setting of poems from "Gitanjali" by Rabindranath Tagore, the Nobel Prize-winning author — three songs to be sung by the bass-baritone John

These poems have always evoked something in me I find hard to explain. They bring me to tears," Sohal said. "Setting them to music has been a real challenge because there is no drama of any kind to dwell on. But drama is only one aspect of living. These works are about sheer bliss, and that is altogether more clusive."

Sohal was able to indulge fully his taste for the dramatic when he was commissioned by the BBC in 1982 to write a piece for the 50th anniversary of the Henry Wood Promenade Concerts — the popular Proms. For that he wrote "The Wanderer," a long choral work. based on an Old English poem full of loneliness and alienation that struck a chord in Sohal, making a life for himself far from

"The Wanderer" received the kind of ovation customarily reserved for the high-spirited final night of the Proms — a remarkable response to a new piece of music that was complicated and frequently somber.

Music came into Sohal's life relatively late. As a schoolboy he was passionately fond of cricket and good at science. But in the end his commitment to the thimgs in which he showed early promise waned. He studied mathematics and physics at Punjab University, but left before his finals because he had suddenly set his heart on a musical career, and his sights on the Bombay film industry, which offered one way in. It was a typically headstrong decision that ended in the failure his family feared, but Sohal has all the hallmarks of the survivor solid self-confidence, little material ambi-tion, and an optimistic belief in life's myriad opportunities. Born in 1939 into a comfortable middle--class family, he grew up in Jullundur, near the Pakistan border. His early years were much affected by India's partition in 1947. His father was a refugee resettlement officer, and his home was always full of people

T the age of 15, Sohal bought himself a harmonica, taught himself harmony harmonica, laught then began writing and notation, and then began writing tunes for Jullundur's military band. His orientation toward Western composition, he says, was at least partly due to defiance, after an Indian musician refused to teach him, a musical novice, the traditional ragas. "I retorted that people like him who kept knowledge exclusively to themselves were responsible for the decline of Indian civilization," Sohal laughs.

He didn't believe that anyone who showed talent would be so arrogantly dismissed in the West, so when he failed to win an Indian government scholarship, he decided to seek opportunities overseas.

Ignoring his family's forebodings about poverty, Sohal arrived in London in 1962 with £2 in his pocket and nothing mapped out. He is a small, serious-minded man who laughs easily — particularly when he recalls his arrival in Britain and his astonishment at the sight of so many "pink, unhealthy-looking people."

Sobal found work in a canning factory and then as a copyist with the music publishers Boosey and Hawkes. He took evening classes in music and private tuition from a composer, Jeremy Dale Roberts, whose belief in his pupil sustained Sohal.

"Jeremy would often spend a long time looking at my score and then just say, 'I wonder how you are going to continue this piece?' I used to wonder why he didn't actually tell me anything, but I see now he was paying me the compliment of recognizing me as a composer from the start."

The Society for New Music gave Sohal his break when he submitted his composition. "Asht Prahar," an evocative piece expressing intervals of time between dawn and darkness. It was chosen for performance at Festi-val Hall by the London Symphony Orchestra and, Sohal says, "It was the first time I'd heard my own work performed, and if excitement and joy which are beyond belief have happened in my life, that was the mo-

| Before 'Paradise,' and After — Marcel Carné's Prickly Recollections

ARIS — The great period of French films was 1936-45 according to Marcel Carne, the director whose finest works, not coincidentally, span those years: "Drôle de Drame," "Hôtel du Nord." "Quai des Brumes," "Le Jour se Lève," "Les Visiteurs du Soir" and a film that is on most people's 10-best lists, "Les Enfants du Paradis."

The last major survivor of his generation, Carné is stocky, prickly and to his mind insufficiently appreciated in France although covered with honors, including the rosette of Commandeur of the Legion d'Honneur, and a newly-released film of homage, "Marcel Carné, l'Homme à la Camera," directed by the veteran Christian-Jacque. The film celebrates Carné's 50 years of filmmaking and, while grateful, Carne thinks it might have been better if he had given the director a hand.

When he speaks of the old days, Carné is critical of his colleagues except for the directors Jacques Feyder (whose assistant he was and whose wife, Françoise Rosay, starred in Carne's first feature) and the now-forgotten Jean Grémillon (1902-59).

"Jean Renoir always spoke ill of me; I think he was jealous. Then there was René Clair, but I didn't get on well with him. His films have aged badly. Grémillon made films that I thought very fine but that the public didn't like."

A painstaking and expert craftsman, Carne --- who is about 80 but will not reveal his age -says he got his taste for work from his father, a cabinetmaker in the Batignolles district of Paris. After a year studying his father's trade, young Marcel, dapper in spats and slicked-back hair, alighted briefly in the business world before talking himself into a vague assistantship with Feyder that soon developed into a valuable collaboration.

His first film was a 22-minute short, cinéma verité long before the phrase existed. Inspired by his love for impressionist painting and by the fact that he had only a small camera and no funds for indoor work, he followed Parisian workers on a Sunday outing to riverside guinguettes where they laughed and danced and ate and drank until time came, sadly, to take the train back to town. The film was called, "Nogent, Eldorado du Dimanche," and Carne cannot see why people who see it today are so touched.
"I don't see anything extraordinary about it." he says. Carné has often been at odds with the public, the press or producers, sometimes with all three at once. Understandably for a man who continued to make feature films until 1973, he does not like it thought that his career ended with "Les Enfants du Paradis"

E feels that there was a distinct plot, a cabale, he calls it, to bring him down and that it was led by the nouvelle vague. "They were critics before they became directors and they systematically demolished everyone who came before them in order to take their place. They were little arrivistes, Truffaut and Godard, people who wanted to arrive and who destroyed others in order to do so. Chabrol, too." The atmosphere was not lightened when, accord-Continued on page 9 ing to Le Figaro, Carné called the nouvelle vague "congenitally impotent." Carne says

he never said such a thing.
When he began making films, Carné says, the French were for the most part making awful light romances with people in le smoking going to casinos. "Then I came along," he says, "with my fog and lampposts and streets glistening in the rain." The film he is talking about is the extraordinarily atmospheric "Quai des Brumes" with Michèle Morgan and Jean Gabin (1938). From then on, Carné was tagged with a label: poetic realism.

"I don't like the term," Carné says in his grand living room in Saint-Germain-des-Près (he moved there a few years ago because his doctor told him the air in Auteuil, where he then lived, was not good for him). "I prefer the term fantastique sociale which Pierre Mac Orlan uses about some of his scene in which Jouvet and his rival actor, Michel Simon, were privately vying to nudge each other into insensibility by drinking real scotch). "Hôtel du Nord" gave a new reso-nance to the word "atmosphère," as uttered by Arletty, the great actress who is Carné's

"I never use the word 'atmosphère,'" Ar-letty writes in her memoirs, "for it belongs to

The dingy original Hôtel du Nord still stands on the edge of the a newly gentrified Canal Saint-Martin in Paris, but Carne did his filming in a studio. Studio filming is a subject that makes him defensive: He says be was violently criticized for building a fake Barbès-Rochechouart Metro station when the real one was right there. The real one was unsuitable, he says.
"I remember the days when one had to film in a studio, you couldn't even film in a hotel room, for example, the equipment was too heavy. If the nouvelle vague made the cinema more mobile, the merit belongs not to them but to the engineers who came out with lightweight equipment and more sensi-tive film. If they'd had the material I had to work with before the war and just after, they would never have been able to shoot in natural decors.'

If they were studio-bound, Carné's films seemed much closer to real life than the more conventional prewar product. Technically he was in advance - "Le Jour se Lève" with Gabin and Arletty was the first French film to be told in flashback —and in his fatalism and his distrust of le happy end he was reflecting the mood of the time. "One felt it was the end of something, it was a melancholy time. In 1936 there was the Front Populaire, which gave great hope, then the war in Spain which one knew quite well would be the start of the world war. To make happy films in those days - I think one has to let the climate of the time come through."

The day after the invasion of Poland, a came out headlined, "Attention, Producers! Make films that are healthy and optimistic." Carné and Renoir, the article said, had better change their style and start making films full of "courage and happiness and light."

During the occupation. Carné avoided making films for the Vichy-backed Continental film company. With his collaborator from the days of his first feature-length film, "Jenny" in 1936, the writer Jacques Prévert, Carné decided that their next film should be set in the past to avoid government interfer-ence. They chose the Middle Ages of "Les Très'Riches Heures" of the Duc de Berri and built a château that, like the château in the illuminated manuscript, was white because it was brand new (a lot of people thought it should look old, as medieval chateaus do).

Arletty starred, the extras included Simone : Signoret and Alain Resnais, and the film, 'Les Visiteurs du Soir," was again a story of ill-starred love. The Devil, played by Jules Berry, figures in the story and there are lines that could be seen as allusions to the Occupation, but Carné says there was no such -

"There are lines that might be taken as attacks on Vichy but I don't remember, quite sincerely, that we thought of any such thing at the time. You must remember that we were very humiliated, shamed. There was in each of us - without our being aware of it a surge to recapture by the spirit what we had lost by arms."

ADRID — A cultural and spiritual renaissance has taken hold in Spain since the death of Francisco Franco 10 years ago, and nowhere is it more evident than here in the capital.

The city of four million people has revived a Spanish avant-garde tradition that had been represented by painters such as Picasso and writers such as Federico Garcia Lorca. The new attitude has a name, La Movida Madrileña, which loosely translates as The Madrid Happening, and it can be seen in the emergence of scores of creative young painters, sculptors, musicians and architects.

The streets of Madrid, especially at night, are filled with fashionable young people who dress in styles ranging from the extreme with spiked hair to the more subtle Jimmy Dean look. Many of the city's newspapers and magazines brim with political and intellectual debate. Ideas of violence and revolution are largely dismissed.

Sponsored by the Madrid regional govern-ment, the second Festival de Otoño, or Fall Festival, opens Sept. 22 in the Teatro Real de la Opera, the Royal Opera, with a concert by the pianist Alicia de Larrocha. In the same theater, Daniel Barenboim will conduct the Orchestre de Paris Oct. 9 and 10, and Lorin Maazel will conduct the Orchestre National de France Oct. 13. The Spanish National Orchestra will perform several concerts throughout the festival.

Chamber and other music in exquisite settings will abound. On Sept. 27, the Quarteto Hispanico Numen will perform works by Boccherini in the Palacio de Duque de Sueca, about half an hour by car outside Madrid in the small town of Boadilla del Monte. (Boccherini was a guest in the palacio in the 18th century, and the building remains occupied by the duque's descendants.) New and old Spanish works will be played by various groups inside the Prado Museum, Oct. 14, 15, 17 and 18. The concerts are in memory of Scarlatti, another Italian composer associated with Spain.

In La Escorial, the awesome royal palace also about half an hour away, the organist Montserrat Torrent will perform Oct. 11. On Oct. 12, bands will march through the Puerta del Sol and 20 choruses will perform in churches throughout the city and region.

turn into a center for revelry by Madrileños.

The style is to hop from bar to bar, standing elbow to elbow at each, munching on appetizers called tapas and drinking cañas. glasses of draft beer.

A good place to begin is in La Toja, outside an arch leading into the Plaza from Calle Mayor. Its seafood is superb. Try long, reedy-looking shellfish called navajas for $3 a plateful. Salpicon de mariscos, a mixture of seafood, chopped onions and green peppers brushed with oil and vinegar, costs $5.50 a plate. Gambas al ajillo, shrimp in hot oil and garlic and served in a small, clay bowl, costs $4. (The current exchange rate is about 170 pesetas for the dollar.)

Across the Plaza, outside the Botoneras Arch, Mesón los Gallegos has fried baby squid, called chopitos, for $2.50 a plateful. Hoya podrida, a hearty stew of chickpeas, chicken, sausages and the like costs $2.50. Pickle lovers should try a halved pickle stuffed with a boqueron (a small, marinated anchovy) for 25 cents each.

On Cuchilleros Street, back of the build-ing that surrounds the Plaza Mayor, is a series of bars, many of them dedicated to a single specialty such as mushrooms, boquerones or tortilla española (the last is an omelet made with potatoes). The food is inexpensive and the bars in the neigborhood are often filled with university students singing in the back. Down the street on the far side of the Plaza de Puerta Cerrada is the Bar Gallego, a comfortable place with Galician specialties including steamed mussels for $1.40, white

After sundown, the Plaza Mayor and its scores of surrounding bars and retaurants cents and, for $1.50, small green peppers, most of which are sweet (once in a while there is a hot one).

The continuation of Cuchilleros is called Calle de la Cava Baja. At No. 24, which has an elaborate tile facade, is La Chata, a little bar-restaurant. Though only six years old, it offers jumón de bellota, a cured ham from acorn-fed pigs; a serving costs $5.50. Huge, flat mushrooms, called setas, either grilled with garlic or sauteed with clams and garlic, cost $5. A portion of manchego, a cured sheep's milk cheese, is $3.

Botin (Cuchilleros 17: tel: 266-4217), a nearly 300-year-old restaurant that was among Hemingway's favorites, is good for a traditional Castilian meal. The specialties are charcoal-roasted lamb and suckling pig, either of which is $7.50. Casa Lucio (Calle de la Cava Baja 35; 265.3252) serves portions of inch-long eels, called angulas, in hot oil and garlic for $8 and lamb chops for $6.

HE Prado (Paseo del Prado; workdays 9 A.M. to 2 P.M., closed Mondays; admission $2.50) is the standard must, and even veterans of the museum will be impressed by the renovation of many of the rooms in the last year. The collections include more than 100 paintings and 500 drawings by Goya alone; there are also 50 Velázquezes as well as many by El Greco and Murillo, which can be appreciated as never before. The collection is rich in Flemish (more than 600) and Italian (more than 400) works as well. Picasso's "Guernica" is in an annex, the Cason del Buen Retiro, dedicated almost exclusively to the painting.

HE fashionable bars come and go, but all are dim, smoky, informal and filled with music. A good place to begin the night is the Café Central (Plaza del Angel), which features live jazz performances between 10 P.M. and midnight nightly. Then the other places get going.

The more celebrated establishments are Fabrica de Pan (San Bartolome 21), which has murals and a long, marble bar extending to an old bread oven in the back. El Ras (Barbieri 7) has good recorded rock music and people often dance, with or without partners, on a small

The latest in fashion design can be seen in boutiques such as Adolfo Dominguez (Serrano 96 and Ayala 24), where a loose linen lake for boating, many cafés, monuments and the Palacio de Crystal, a site of major art dress fetches around $125 and a pair of men's baggy pants costs around $60.

Two of the hottest young designers also sell straight from their studios, an exciting way to buy that seems certain not to last long since their popularity is growing. In addition to high fashion evening wear, Agata Ruiz de la Prada (Marques de Riscal 8, basement or apartment 4B) sells silk smocks for $75 and loose-fitting men's printed cotton shirts for $30. Sybilia (del Sil 6; tel: 261-7157), who must be called first for an appointment, has a wide range of styles and prices.

Perhaps the best hotel is the Ritz (Plaza de la Lealtad 5; $180 for exterior double; tel: 221-2857) but request a renovated room. In addition to being next to the Prado, the Ritz has formal sitting rooms, an excellent restaurant and attendant service.

A good buy for a top hotel is in the Palace 7551), which is across the boulevard from the Prado, has large and comfortable rooms and is undergoing a face-lift that makes it look splendid.

The Villamagna (Paseo de la Castellana 22; $160 a double; 261-4900) is modern, of modest size and well run.

Gran Hotel Victoria (Plaza del Angel 7; $37 a double; 231-4500), a favorite of En-glish writers, has a worn lobby and is being renovated.

Among restaurants, Zalacain (Alvarez de Baema 4; 261-5935) is Basque influenced and superb in food, wine, service and décor, down to its rich colors and tasteful art on the walls. Dinner for two with the house wine, dessert and coffee comes to about $85. Among the dishes on its regularly changing menu has been a lukewarm salad with pigeon and fore gras as an appetizer, followed by sea bass in a sauce of red bell peppers. El Amparo (Callejón de Puigcerdá 8; 431-dishes as angulas and watercress salad and

El Lúculo (Génova 19; 419-4029) opened recently and is Catalan influenced, Built with an Art Deco motif around the patios of a renovated building, it serves up thinly sliced salmon marinated in olive of and chicken stuffed with sweetbreads and river crabs. Dinner for two with house write is about $70. Horcher (Alfonso X11 6; 222-0731) and the Jockey (Amador de los Rios 6; 419-1003) are the two classics and continue serving international cuisine, each for about $85 a

Three superb and informal restaurants for seafood are El Peseador (José Ortega y Gasset 75; 402-1290), La Trainera (Lagasca 60; 435-8954) and O'Pazo (Reina Mercedes 28; 253-2333). Some Good Airline Deals Are Found on the Ground

by Roger Collis

THE SAS flight over the Pole from Tokyo arrives in Copenhagen around 6 A.M. There is a limo to take you to the Hotel Scandinavia take you to the Hotel Scandinavia for a sauna and massage and a full Danish breakfast. You have time to relax, even nap, before the limo takes you back to the airport for the 9:40 A.M. flight to London. You arrive at 10:30 A.M. in good shape, whereas the direct flight — which leaves Tokyo at the same time — lands at Heathrow at the inhospitable bour of 5:55 A.M.

This is the SAS "refreshment package." If you'd had more time, you could have stayed you'd had more time, you could have stayed over to sample the deluxe treatment — limo transfer, full breakfast, snorgasbord lunch, single sighteest and the stay sight seal the sta city sightseeing, treatment at a health club, gourmet dinner and a night in a first-class hotel. Both these parkages are free to SAS passengers arriving on intercontinental flights with full-fare tickets (which on SAS puts you into business class) and who are booked through the next day for a destination outside of Scandinavia

This is an example of what some airlines are doing to make it attractive to transit at their major hubs. Clearly, the priority for most business travelers is getting there quickly and comfortably. But it can sometimes make sense to stop over somewhere interesting rather than to fly direct. (How to rationalize this with the Puritan Work Ethic - the pause that refreshes, or combining fun and profit -- is up to you.) Some of the best airline deals are on the ground. Back before jumbo jets and business class, when the International Air Transport Association used to regulate everything from seat pitch to sandwiches, many airlines gave free stopovers to include meals and hotels. An IATA rule (which still applies, except for North and South America, Australia and traffic within Europe) allows airlines to do this provided there is no prompt onward connection, up to a maximum of 24 hours. They are not allowed to advertise this, although they may inform travel agents and publish the fact in timetables. Passengers are supposed to hold either a firm onward reservation or be wait-listed on the next available flight. However, some airlines are stretching the rules and discreetly marketing free or heavily subsidized stopovers, often in collaboration with local tourist authorities.

The advent of the hub and spoke strategy, by which you can make a connection to practically anywhere within a few hours, has reduced the opportunities for free stopovers. But American Airlines will give a free dayroom and lunch in Paris for eastbound passengers connecting to Africa and the Middle East. British Airways will give a free night's accomodation to passengers traveling from the Caribbean over Miami to connect with Concorde, and Air France will do the same if you are coming through Paris from, say, Rome and going on to Rio.

But for free stopover buffs, the best deals are with the so-called Sixth Freedom airlines with small domestic markets that need to attract transit traffic. (Sixth Freedom is when passengers are carried between two countries by the airline of a third via its home base. For example, flying Icelandair London-Reykjavik-New York, or KLM Manchester-Schiphol-Singapore.)

While the SAS packages in Copenhagen are hard to beat (SAS also does a free day package in Singapore for passengers connecting to Sydney), Austrian is an airline that tries harder than most. Normally, if you want to go from Frankfurt to Jeddah you would take a direct flight. But you might be tempted to fly to Vienna, arriving at 10:05 lines before taking the 11:25 P.M. flight that gets you to Jeddah for breakfast. Or you might fly London-Vienna in the evening, have a free dinner and night in the Hilton or Intercontinental, and take the 7 A.M. flight to Damascus the next morning.

A novel way to fly to New York from London (even better coming the other way) is to pamper yourself with Icelandair's free 24-hour stopover. Flying east, you would arrive in Reykjavik around 7 A.M. You might start with a swim in the thermally heated pool at the hotel, have breakfast, sleep until lunch and then make a shopping trip (woolens are great bargains) or take an excursion to the hot volcanic springs. You could contine to London in the late after-noon or stay overnight and leave in the morning. Both are great ways to unwind.

Free or discount stopovers attract transit traffic

One of the best known stopovers is Iberia's "Madrid Amigo" 24-hour package for intercontinental passengers. (There's a minipackage with dayroom and lunch at the Barajas Airport Hotel for those with six hours or less.) You need to plan your itinerary from, say, London to Mexico City on a Tuesday, Thursday or Saturday, not on a Monday when there's a straight through flight. The package gives you free transfers, lunch, a tour of the Prado Museum, dinner with a flamenco show or an evening at the casino, and a first-class hotel. There are similar packages for Barcelona and the Canaries. For example, flying east from New York, you could transfer from Madrid to Barcelona, spend the night there, compliments of Iberia, and continue to a Middle East destination the next morning. You could transit in Barcelona en route from London to Cairo, or stop over in Las Palmas for 24 hours on your way from Caracas to Abidian or Lagos. Not all the best stopovers are free; there are many worthwhile discounts. For example, Singapore Airlines offers stopover holidays (which must be bought in advance) for one to four days, including hotel accomodations, transfers, breakfast and sightseeing in 18 cities, from Amsterdam to Tokyo. Prices in Singapore range from $24 for one night to $114 for four nights in a first-class hotel to $35 to $173 in a deluxe hotel. You must arrive and leave with Singapore Airlines.

If you're flying from Europe to Australia, try a "Stay-a-While Shopover" with Cathay Pacific in Hong Kong. You arrive around 9 A.M. so you can either stay 24 hours or take an evening departure that day. You get a free limo to your hotel (The Mandarin or the Hyatt Regency for about $32) and a "Cost-less Encounters" discount card and guidebook that entitles you to shopping and entertainment bargains.

If you're making Schiphol your first point of arrival or final point of departure in Europe, you could do worse than take KLM's "Happy Holland Bargain." This offers a single room from $29 to $55 for the first night, a 50-percent discount on domestic flights within the Netherlands, and a raft of shopping and entertainment discounts as well as free transfers to and from the airport.

These are just a few of the deals available. You need to do your own scouring with airline schedules and a phone book. Who A.M., enjoying a day's sightseeing, perhaps fitting in a business call, with limo transfers and dinner compliments of Austrian Air-rather than in the Paris Mètro.

Restoring the Great Wall of China

by John F. Burns

OST travelers to outposts of the Old World know what it is to feel time receding. On the steps of the Senate in Rome, toward dusk when the crowds have fled the Forum, the visitor has only to filter out the traffic noise to imagine how it was in Julius Caesar's time. In Leningrad, before the Hermitage museum on a snowy winter's night, the last days of the Romanovs in their Winter Palace can suddenly spring to life.

In China, the oldest continuous civilization of all, it is not always easy for the mind to track backward in time. In their haste to accommodate the hundreds of thousands of visitors arriving each year, the custodians of the country's greatest relics are making maior efforts at physical restoration, but frequently the sense of history is lost for the want of attention to milieu. Too often, there is too much noise, too much commercialization, too great an obtrusion of the present into the precincts of the past.

Nowhere is this more noticeable than at the Great Wall. Since Richard Nixon made his pilgrimage in 1972, just about every American reaching Beijing has made the 50-mile trek north to Badaling, the site chosen by the Communist government in 1956 when it ordered the first major restoration of the wall in centuries. Arriving there, like Nixon, almost everybody has been struck by the sheer volume of the masonry and the scope of the labor involved, but the spirit of the place has been disappointingly clusive.

"It is a great wall," said Nixon, in what the press corps at the time took for one of his amous tautologies. In fact, the former president captured — perhaps inadvertently — the blandness of the scene. There is no museum; the surrounding hills are mostly bare of vegetation, and in winter it is bitingly cold. With the encouragement of tourism and small-scale private enterprise in recent years things have deteriorated still further. Those joining the press of humanity atop the wall are instantly set upon by hawkers of "I Climbed the Great Wall" T-shirts, of fake Ming Dynasty coins and of much other bric-

Much of this is about to change. On Oct. 1 the Bureau of Relics in Beijing will officially open a new site for visitors to the Wall. It is in Mutianyu, a village nestling amid the Yan Mountains northeast of the capital. It is the first major restoration of the wall in the Beijing area since Badaling in the 1950s and the largest of at least five similar projects under way along a 1,000-mile stretch of the wall from the province of Lizoning to the province of Shanxi. Together, the projects make for the biggest upgrading of the wall since it ceased being a defensive battery with the collapse of the Ming Dynasty in 1644. As officials in Beijing envisage it, Mu-tianyu will draw off at least two million visitors a year from Badaling, where four million tourists are expected by the end of this year. At each site, about one-third of the visitors will be foreigners, the others Chinese. For the majority of Americans who visit China as members of groups with prearranged itineraries, it may be difficult to make the switch, but the advantages of the new site justify the effort. With the number of visitors rising rapidly each year, Badaling will continue to be the busier of the two sites, and other factors are even more compelling. Mutianyu is closer to Beijing, about 45 miles from most hotels in the center of the city. The road is also better, a modern divided highway for the first 30 miles or so giving way to a narrower road that winds gently through lush countyside for the last 15 miles. In place of the rugged brown hills that are the prelude to Badaling, the approaches to Mutianyu are a vista of rice paddies, wheat fields and beekeepers' hives, with a glimpse here and there of peasants bathing and washing their clothes in a broad stream.

ORKERS will be busy right up to opening day with the last mile or so of road, a once dusty track that has been widened and surfaced to carry traffic to two parking lots a few hundred yards apart at the base of the mountains. One is in the village of Mutianyu, a sleepy hollow that is a picture of rural China, with donkey carts and whispy-bearded old men sunning themselves on their stoops. From there a climb of 1,060 freshly cut white granite steps winds steeply upward to the wall through orchards and groves, which are absent at Badaling.

When I made the climb with my family on a scorching weekend morning last month it was an endurance test. With the temperature in the mid-90s, our 10-year-old son bounded ahead with his 4-year-old brother, leaving their mother and an English nanny trailing with their infant sister. I had resolved to carry our picnic to the wall, about 1,400 feet above sea level, but yielded to impulse along the way and persuaded a friendly village woman to hire out her donkey. With the impedimenta safely roped to the animal's back, she disappeared up a nearby trail and was at the top, waiting, by the time we

For some visitors, the challenge of the steps may prove irresistible. For others, it will be a relief to learn that a company formed jointly by the Chinese and a Hong Kong concern will be building a cable car route this winter from the second parking lot to the summit, carrying up to 1,500 passengers an hour. Workers are already busy preparing the lower terminal and a restaurant capable of seating 1,000 people. Officials hope to have the cable car in operation by

In time the Relics Bureau envisages a similar cable car for Badaling. There, buses and cars halt within a short, level walk of the wall, but the precipitous climb along the wall to either side has been too much for many visitors, particularly older ones. In this, as in other instances, Mutianyu has an advantage, with thick stands of oak and sycamore trees to hide the pylons that will support the aerial car's cables. At Badaling, where generations of peasants have stripped the hillsides bare for firewood and building timber, disguising the route will be more difficult.

In both places the restored sections of the wall date from the Ming Dynasty, when millions of soldiers and peasants worked over a period of two centuries to construct a lorulication from the Yalu River, now border with North Korea, westward to Jiayuguan Pass in the province of Gansu. (The total lenghth of the wall itself is about 1,500 miles.) With a granite base and a brick superstructure, the Ming sections proved more lasting than earthenware portions constructed in the Oin and Han dynasties more than 1,200 years earlier. But the wall's relevance for the empire's defense ended in 1644, when a disaffected general, Wu Sangui, opened the gate to Manchu invaders at Shanhaiguan, 100 miles east of Mutianyu.

As at Badaling, the mile-long section of wall at Mutianyu is dotted with two-story watchtowers, sections of steep steps and crenelated battlements. But at Mutianyu, far more than at Badaling, the imagination can leap backward across the centuries. Looking north, the eye takes in a panorama of plunging mountains and val-leys, with mud-colored sections of the Han and Qin walls clearly visible. Looking back down the valley, the back-breaking work for laborers who lived and died building the wall becomes almost tangible.

A facsimile of their travails exists in the donkeyloads of sand and bricks that ascend the mountain from dawn to dusk each day. serving the crews that are putting finishing touches on the restoration. Unlike their ancestors, the hundreds of Mutianyu villagers drafted into the work are paid albeit at a rate of barely $1 a day. Ironically, some of the stones and bricks being used are making their second trip up the mountain, five centuries after their first, having been looted by peasants 15 or 20 years ago during the Cultural Revolution.

The extent of damage done to the wall

then is difficult to gauge, but it was serious enough to persuade the State Council in Beijing to issue a decree imposing stiff penalties on peasants who might continue to use the bricks for their pigsties and chicken runs. One peasant west of Beijing who built a kiln out of stones looted from the wall was heavily fined earlier this year and ordered to replace the stones at his own expense. When another peasant volunteered the return of 3,000 stones that he had used to extend his house and pigsty, he was publicly commended and rewarded with a free truckload of replacement bricks.

The stiliness that we found atop the wall at Mutianyu will hardly last once the site opens, at least at times of peak visits. But those wishing to enjoy the area without crowds could skip the tourist buses and take a taxi from Beijing, either early or late. Fares vary but are unlikely to be much more than $35 round trip. Foreigners belonging to a Beijing church group that holds Easter Sunday services at dawn atop the Great Wall at Badaling swear that there is no better time to see the wall than when the sun is rising over the hills.

dis," shot in the Victorine Studios in Nice while Carné was not Jewish, he was Jewishand in Paris. Again, as an escape from inter-ference, Camé and Prévert set the film in the past — in the colorful early 19th-century Boulevard du Crime, the Parisian center of theater and lowlife swept away by Baron Haussmann to make room for the Place de la République. The stars were Arletty. Jean-Louis Barrault (in a moment of panic when he thought he might not get Barrault, Carné thought of signing a new mime named Jacques Tati), Pierre Brasseur and a newcomer, Maria Casarès, with clandestine help from the composer Joseph Kosma and the designer Alexander Trauner, both Jews in hiding.

"For me the film was an act of friendship, I never imagined it would have that success, none of us did," Carné says. "I never thought people would talk about it forty years later. When I'm filming," he adds, "I'm not much aware of what's going on aroung me. I'm in sort of a trance." Arletty once said that anyone who filmed Carné while filming could make a fortune.

"I make a film rather as if I am taking up a religion. There is a special atmosphere, though it may sound pretentious, that I have never seen on another set. Of course I am talking about the days when the crew was really attached, fixed, to the director. Today they talk during shots. Not only could I have not made 'Les Enfants du Paradis' without the actors I had, but also I couldn't have done it without that crew."

Carné tried to slow up post-production so that "Les Enfants du Paradis" would be France's first postwar film, but it came out just before war's end.

During the Occupation, the collaboration-ist critic Lucien Rebatet had written that influenced, which was nearly as bad, and that he should watch his step. After the Occupation, Carné found himself accused of collaboration before an ad hoc tribunal because he had continued to film. "It's a period no one can understand who didn't live through it," he says. He was given a public rebuke and his name was posted on the studio door. Arletty, who had loved a German officer, was imprisoned. To post-synch

"Les Enfants du Paradis," Carné had to ask the police to send for Arletty.

She came to the studio with two gendarmes and everyone turned their backs on her, even Brasseur. I was very disappointed by Brasseur. She had terrific guts. She had to do her first scene with Brasseur, very lively and gay, and she did."

Arletty, Kosma, Trauner and above all Prevent were Carne's team. The decline in his work is usually traced to his break with Prévert after "Les Portes de la Nuit" in 1946. Prevert got bad reviews, worse than mine, and he said he was fed up with writing scripts." Carne says. He understandably, bridles at Prevert's being given too much importance, but Prevert's contribution is un-

No one can speculate on what Carné and Prévert (who died in 1977) would have done had their 30-year partnership not ended. Some of their projects that fell through are, like most fallen projects and some realized ones, mind-bogging, such as a life of Diaghilev with Orson Welles.

The real stunner was an idea that came to them just after "Les Enfants du Paradis." Prevert and Carné decided to make a film of "Mary Poppins." Unfortunately, says Carné, they were unable to secure the rights.

more about war and photography as an act of courage and as an instrument of persuasion should see the shows of all three.

And then there is what promises to be the most comprehensive collection of war photography ever assembled: "The Indelible Image: Photographs of War, 1846 to the Present." Its 200-plus pictures, many of them by anonymous and unknown photographers, were uncovered by Frances Fralin of the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, but the show opens Sept. 25 at New York University's Grey Art Gallery. The well-known photographers it includes range from Mathew Brady, image impresario of the Civ-il War, to Larry Burrows, arguably the greatest photographer of Vietnam.

Not all photojournalism is of wars, of course. Just how far afield it can range will be obvious when the final installment of the Corcoran Gallery's three-part survey, "The New York School," opens there Oct. 26. Featuring work by Diane Arbus, Bruce Davidson, Richard Avedon and others, the exhibition argues the existence of a "New York documentary style."

Some of the most promising exhibitions are being put in other U. S. cities: "In the American West," Richard Avedon's remarkable life-size and larger portraits of miners, drifters and drinkers, is being sponsored by the Amon Carter Museum in Houston, and "L'Amour fou: Photography and Surreal-ism," opens at the Corcoran Gallery in Washington. "In the American West." a significant milestone in Avedon's journey across the grain of fashion, seems to be traveling everywhere but New York. It will be at the Corcoran in December. "L'Amour fou" is the eagerly awaited study by the contentious art historian Rosalind Krauss and the Corcoran's Jane Livingston of the wealth of incongruous photographic imagery made between the world wars by the likes of Man Ray and René Magritte. New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art has a new photography curator in Maria Morris Hambourg, the Atget scholar. Unlike her counterparts at the Museum of Modern Art, she seems open to playing host to shows originated outside her own domain. In addition, the International Center of Photography is readying a new midtown space for an October opening.

Meanwhile, the Metropolitan's once-delayed Kertész show, organized with the Art Institute of Chicago, arrives in December. A key figure of the 1950s—and of any account of a postwar "New York school"—William Klein, will be showing new photographs at Zabriskie Gallery late next month.

The late Ansel Adams's 75-print "museum set" of what he considered his greatest work goes on exhibit at the National Gallery of Art Oct. 6, in a show titled "Ansel Adams: Classic Images." This, together with the Cor-coran Gallery's "L'Amour fou" show, makes a trip to Washington almost mandatory.

Empire," he found particularly fascinating.

"It was a part of my history I was too young to know, but which greatly affected my life. India was the first country to get independence from Britain, and it was tremendously significant. I wanted to understand why the British decided to leave, and how they went about it, and the documentaries turned up information from very ordinary people who were part of the process."

A distinctive feature of Sohal's music is his use of quarter-tones which, he says, is less due to his familiarity with them in Indian music than to a personal hunch that they could add something to Western composition. He spent two years researching subject at Leeds University. "An artist must have some irreverence, some leeway to question the most established things," he comments. He believes that in Scotland, where he now lives, modern composers tend to be constrained by their atonalism. He sees evidence of similar inhibition further afield, and regrets it.

"Music should express the composer's ex-periences," he says. "Society is changing very rapidly, and surely that fact should find new expression rather than looking back-ward for style."

The Dorchester Experience

More than £12 million spent on refurbishments

Situated on Park Lane, in the heart of Mayfair, overlooking the lush greenery and flowers of London's Hyde Park, you will find the epitome of British tradition, service and hospitality - The Dorchester.

The hotel bas been operated by Regent International for just over a year, and the company has continued to maintain the same standards of luxury and excellence that can also be found in its eleven other properties around the world.

It has always been the policy of The Dorchester to provide the finest traditions of hospitality with gracious and attentive service, and during the last five years more than £12 million has been spent on alterations and improvements for the benefit of the hotel's discerning guests.

Visitors to The Dorchester are first struck by the magnificent Promenade more than 165 feet of marble interspaced with beautiful hand made carpets from Manila, and studded with majestic apricot and white pillars.

The Promenade is the setting for yet another great British tradition - tea at The Dorchester, complete with wafer thin cucumber sandwiches, oven hot scones and rich Devonshire cream.

During the afternoon, and throughout the evening, a pianist plays light music as tail-coated waiters move silently amongst the giant palms and growing ferns dotted throughout the length of the room.

Leading from the Prom-enade is the Terrace Restaurant presided over by The Dorchester's world famous Maitre Chef des Cuisines, Anton Mosimann.

restaurant not only without equal for its ambiance, but for its food which has been widely acclaimed by the world's leading food writers.

In deliberate contrast to the traditional English fare which distinguishes The Dorchester's Grill Room, the Terrace aims to lay special emphasis on feeding the eye as well as the palate. Anton Mosimann has always believed in presenting his dishes as if they were works of art. Colour and simplicity of appearance are, to him, important as the taste of the finished article.

Flavour and lightness are the hallmarks of the Terrace menu, whether personal preference is for a la carte, the table d'hote menu, or for the Menu Surprise - six delicious feather light courses made from fresh produce from the market that day - the accent is on simplicity and originality.

The Grill Room takes as its theme "the Best of the British Isles" and uses the finest of British ingredients, such as Scottish beef, Welsh lamb and Norfolk turkey. Each day features a regional speciality such as broiled silverside and caraway dumplings from east Anglia or braised beef in Guinness from the Midlands. There is also roast beef and smoked Scotch salmon from the trolley, plus an extensive a la carte menu including a selection of mouth-watering dishes made from produce bought from the early morning markets at Covent Billingsgate and Garden. Smithfield

The reputation of the Grill was further enhanced last year when international food guide and critic, Egon Ronay, made it his restaurant of the year, placing it above 500 good restaurants in the major cities of Europe and the United

One of the most fashionable places to meet in London is The Dorchester Bar. Designer, Alberto Pinto, has dramatically split levelled the room and then used limed oak panelling, mirrors and remarkable blue and white ceramic tiles specially fired in France, to create a seductive, leisurely charm.

This breathtaking room is the perfect place for a light luncheon or pre-theatre supper, when it is also possible to listen to London's leading piano bar entertainer, Mike McKenzie.

A Hallmark of Excellence

Over 200 years of painstaking craftsmanship

In 1775 Jonathan Mappin entered his mark at the assay office in Sheffield, and before long cuilery bearing that mark was finding its way onto the better-kept dining tables of the city. By the end of the eighteenth century, Mappin had made a name for himself as a craftsman who could turn his hands to most things silver; fine goblets, engraved plate, clasps and even dog collars are recorded as being produced at his workshop in the early years.

We must presume that Jonathan Mappin's eye for style and excellence was inherited, along with the business, by his heirs. By 1849 his descendants, Joseph Mappin & Son, were well enough established in Sheffield to take a footbold in the City of London. Premises were acquired at 17 Fore Street, and within a very short while indeed the volume of business demanded that new sites be developed at Moorgate and King William Street.

for quality that has been guarded jealously from that day to this.

Mappin Brothers (as the Company became known) expanded cautiously throughout the 1850's. By 1858, five hundred skilled plate workers were employed at the plate factory in Sheffield, and it was about this time that one of the brothers, Frederick Mappin, left the business to move into steel production. The other brother, John Newton Mappin took into partnership George Webb, his brother-in-law, thus forming the first association of Mappin & Webb. In 1862 Mappin & Webb opened their first new shop in London in Regent Street. The name Mappin was already well known in the capital, and by the end of the decade Mappin & Webb had consolidated this reputation with a further two shops.

Gold had been discovered in rich veins on the Witwaters Rand in South Africa. At about the same time, in 1896, Mappin & Webb opened their first overseas branch in Iohannesburg.

In 1904, a branch was opened in Paris. The French proved to be as appreciate of craftsmanship as the English and the South Africans, and by 1909 new premises had been taken at Number One, Rue de la Paix, where the Mappin & Webb branch remains to this day.

The inter-war years saw the Company developing its present philosophy; that quality merchandise should be recognised as the finest silverware according to the reputation of the name it bears. It was true to say then, as indeed it is today, that style never goes out of fashion.

Today, the Mappin & Webb range is one of the most outstanding collections of huxury items available to the discerning buyer.

From the famous showrooms in London, the reputation of Mappin & Webb has spread throughout the world. Since the early 1960's, a new policy of expansion has resulted in a number of new premises being opened - first within the British Isles, then later, on an international basis.

When Jonathan Mappin began his business in Sheffield in 1774 he was encouraged in his endeavours by the thought that every moment. painstakingly spent by him would become immortal in a thing of lasting beauty. His silverware would become a celebration of elegance down the ages, reflecting the spirit of his own dedication and that of those who might come after

At Mappin & Webb, that spirit of 1774 lives on.

The Queen of Shopping Streets

There is a collection of rare pieces of antique jewellery at Massada, 45 New Bond Street, close to Grosvenor Street. Men and women who find pleasure in the old rather than the modern will delight in the hundreds of items on display to enchant both the browser and the buyer, whether they wish to spend £30, £3,000, or more.

There are several stupendous pieces made by the master Italian jeweller Carlo Giulamo during the last century. Each has a timelessness to attract women of good taste from every generation. For men there are the pins, stock brooches, cufflinks and wedding rings more than one hundred years old. Among a range of delicate

The city is well-situated to take advantage of the country's famous superhighway system (Autobahn) and the heavily trafficked Rhine River, which leads to the mannmoth harbor of Rouerdam

A wide network of services has grown up in and around Frankfurt. including trade and industrial fairs, international and domestic trading companies, forwarding agents, consulting and accounting firms, legal services and marketing and advertising agencies.

It comes as no surprise that Frankfurt's residents enjoy Germany's highest per-capita share of the gross rational income. The Chamber of Commerce and Industry (IHK) estimates that in 1980, the latest year for which figures are available, that share amounted to 60,802 Deursche marks ($22,109 ar

The stock exchange started on Sept. 9, 1585, with the first regular meeting between Christian and Jewish merchants in front of Löwenstein House on Römerberg (site of City Hall). The present location, a few steps from the Hauptwache, is in a neo-renaissance building opened in 1879. Today, 52 percent of all German stock transactions take place here as well as almost all buying and selling of foreign shares.

Frankfurt's trade fair is even older. The autumn fair (still held each year) dates back to the second half of the 12th century. Emperor Ludwig the Bavarian granted Frankfurt permission to hold a second annual fair, during Lent, in the following century. This fair, too, is still held each spring.

This year, with 23 fairs and exhibitions on its program, the Frankfurt Fair anticipates a record year: 26,000 exhibitors and 2.5 million visitors. One of the biggest fairs is being held now: the International Auto Exhibition (IAA), through Sept. 22. Other internationally well-known Frankfurt fairs are for textiles, chemical engineering and books.

This Is Frankfurt: Message From the Mayor

Lord Mayor Walter Wallmann of Frankfurt am Main knows bis city better than anyone. Here he extols Frankfurt's traditional role as a center of commerce as well as the many recent enhanaments in the art's "quality of Frankfurt's position as a German economic center and one of the most important trade centers of Europe is uncontested. Since the 12th century, Frankfurt has been a trade-fair and business center in Europe Nowadays, Frankfurt's importance as a financial center also reaches far beyond the borders of the Federal Republic of Germany. Some 358 banks and other credit institutions from all over the world have their seat or a divisional office bere. Banking decisions for the whole European market area are also concentrated here.

Frankfurt is the center of one of the largest and most densely populated regions of Germany. About 30,000 German firms and approximately 3,000 enterprises from all over the world make the city their home. The whole Rhine-Main area has about 24 million inhabitants and 1.2 million employees. Over 500,000 people work in Frankfurt on the Main.

The personnel is highly qualified. Over 75 percent have professional training, 4 percent more than the federal average level. The planning by the City of Frankfurt

Dr. Walter Wallmann.

That location of more foreign banks and enterprises here and strengthen our presence abroad.

Of course, Frankfurt should not only consider its own interests as an economic center at the intersection of European highways. Since Frankfurt is unable to boast proximity to the Alps or to the sea, we must complement the attractive economic location of Frankfurt by a massive increase in what we now call quality of life. We can mention ourstanding results in this field: 30 museums; the Old Opera House. the Schauspielhaus, housing an opera house, theater and small Kammerspiel; numerous theaters; the Palmengarten; the Zoo; the Rebstockbad swimming pool and the ice-sports stadium. These are only some of the city's offerings.

Owing to the further is a vital aim of the next few years.

Frankfurt's image has been improving in Germany and also in vices are not only offered to the the world, and keeps on getting Federal Republic of Germany but better. The increase in tourism proves it. The number of overnight stays of foreign visitors alone increased by 5 percent during the first five months of 1985 compared bution of goods, information trans to 1984. That is doubtless a representative figure for the change that means we will have to promote the Frankfurt has undergone in the opinion of its visitors as well. At the same time it attests to the positive efforts being made to enhance this bustling metropolis.

main city," the pilot punned as the flight from London drew closer to . Frankfurt Airport. The city on the Main (actually pronounced "mine") is Germany's main city for business. Four of every five visitors to Frankfurt come here to work.

But in recent years, Frankfurt has been polishing up its historic buildings erecting or renovating museums and half-timbered houses and in general going all our to distract those statistical four visitors from being all business while in town and to make the city even more attractive for the statistical fifth the pure fun-secker.

Two new museums have opened on the celebrated "Museum Bank," bringing to seven the number of museums within a few minutes' walk of one another on the Main River's south shore. Two of the other museums have been extensively renovated.

Most of the seven museums along the so-called Musamsufer are in converted villas facing the Main. The two newest ones, which are next door to one another and opened only weeks apart, are the German Architecture Museum and the German Film Museum.

The Architecture Museum deals with the building styles of the 19th and 20th contunes, displaying models, sketches and photographs But many think that the biggest attraction here is the building itself. Nothing but the shell remains of the 1901 villa, and a new "building within a building" has been put up inside it, which includes a glassroofed arrium.

The house where Goethe was born is also a museum of sorts. Some of the humiture was actually there when Germany's leading classical writer was living in the house. The whole place provides an insight into the life of an 18thcentury patrician family.

Dr. Heinrich Hoffmann, who wrote the famous children's book banquers were held following the "Struwwelperer." A novel way of getting to Sachsenhausen from the downtown district on weekends is aboard the "Apple Wine Express," a brightly painted old streetear with schmalzy music on board. The fare price includes a bottle of apple wine and a pretzel.

If you want to get an idea of what Sachsenhausen used to be like, there are other, less frequented socions of the city, notably Bornheim and Heddenheim, where the tradition of apple wine, genialish-less and outdoor tables camies on. The choice of other dining and drinking establishments in Frankfurt is very wide. There are roof gardens, American-style bars, buffers, salad bars, vegerarian and fish reseauranes, alternate-soone cafés and, by a recent count, 24 different types of foreign restaurant.

Sachsenhausen is not the only widely frequented nightlife district in Frankfurt. There is another around the railroad station. But be careful. It is the red-light district and not designed for family fun.

Another form of entertainment will be found in the theaters, some of which will be of interest even to the non-German-speaking visitor. One of them is the Cafe Thearer, which presents English-language works only. (There is also a movie theater at the airport that shows exclusively English-language films.) The Schauspielhaus carries a full program of opera. Touring musical groups, often from Britain or the United States, perform at the Altre Oper, the Festivalle and the Jahrhunderthalle.

But BiG, which grow out of the "social economy banks" founded by trade unions and consumer cooperatives after World War II, nearly did not make it to Frankfurt. As the six regional Geneinwinschaft banks in Germany prepared to merge into one nationwide bank in the late 1950s, the largest member was the Düsseklorf one, with more than half the total assens of all six. The Düsseldorf Gemeinwirtschaftbank knew where the headquarters of the new organization should be located. In its view, basing the organization in Frankfurt did not make sense because the Frankfurt Geneinwirtschaftbank was not a geniune bank but merely a financial administrator for the trade unions based in its

However, Willi Richter, then head of the German Federation of Trade Unions (DGB), which is based in Düsseldorf, was convinced that Frankfurt was the right place, primarily because the Deutsche Bundesbank (German Central Bank) is located in Frankfurt. Richer anticipated, conecily, that Frankfurt would become Germany's financial and banking center.

Richter managed to swing the . leaders of the individual trade unions in the DGB over to his view. In December 1958, the six

Dr. Ralf Krüger. regional social economy banks merged into one BfG, based in Frankfure

One of the first problems was office space. The new headquarters was eventually located in two nearby buildings, in Neue Mainzer Strasse and Kaiserstrasse. No one could guess, of course, that a neighboring restaurant complex occupied what almost 20 years later, in 1977, would be the site of one of the city's new high-rise buildings, the BfG headquarters. "It is not just an office building," said BiG board member Dr. Ralf Krüger. "It also does something for the people of Frankfurt."

The basement and next two floors are lined with a variety of shops, from a butcher and a baker to a jewelry store and clothing boutiques. A cafe-restautant in front of the building looks out on a wide green lawn and fountains. When the complex opened, some local enthusiasts called it "Frankfurt's Rockefeller Center."

The BIG buil-ling also provides parking space for evening performances at the theaters and opera house across the street. The basement is connected with a subway (U-Bahn) station. "All this came at a time when the city of Frankfurt was looking for ways to make the downtown area more attractive, a place to go for shopping, restaurants and cultural activities," Dr. Krüger said. The BiG retail bank on the second floor recently held an exhibition of drawings by the leading mann. These same works appear in guard role in using such graphics in its annual report," Dr. Krüger pointed out. Each year a different artist is chosen by the bank to produce works on the themes of the individual, society, the economy and banking. The BiG's New York branch has held an exhibition of a collection of the resulting Other German banks are also

"The BiG has played a van-active in art sponsorship and collection. But they could do more, in Dr. Kniger's view. "Banks in the United States and Italy do much more for the arts," he said.

The BiG has entered a new field: "Money and Foresight." Together with the Volksfürsorge insurance company, of which it is a part owner, the bank provides joint customer service for the general public. The plan is to use existing facilities of each company in cerrain locations to provide local banking and insurance office services, one-stop shopping for savings deposits, loans, home-building plans and also life, auto and other forms of insurance. The first pilotproject facility started in June and four more are planned for this year.

Remembrance and integration of the past is the theme of the fifth. Frankfurt Festival, which will continue in and around the city's new/old opera house, the Alte Oper, through Sept. 22.

The many events are being held mainly in the various halls of the opera house, which was reopened in 1981 after 27 years as a World War II ruin. Some events, however, will take place in other theaters. One, an interpretation of the delibknown as dadaism (Sept. 20 and 21), will be held, appropriately enough, in the still-incompleted future subway station in front of the Alte Oper. The festival includes the works of the noted young composer Wolfgang Rihm, whose successful chamber opera "Jacob Lenz" will be presented Sept. 14 and 15. The Washington National Symphony Orchestra will perform on Sept. 21 at the testival.

The Romer, with its stair-step gubles, is an enduring symbol of Frankfurt.

Small Fluorescent Bulbs Cain Acceptance in U.S.

By ELIZABETH KOLBERT New York Times Service

EW YORK — The incandescent light bulb, invented by Thomas Edison in 1879, was such a good idea that it has since become a symbol of inspiration, hovering over heads at the moment of discovery. In the century since Mr. Edison's invention, however, the incandescent bulb has been overtaken in many offices and businesses by the more energy efficient fluorescent bulb.

But for use in household fixtures, consumers have found no acceptable alternative to the pear-shaped incandescent, whose virtues include low cost, small size and a pleasing light complimentary to skin tones.

Recently, however, the nation's major lighting manufacturers
—General Electric Co., Sylvania, which is a subsidiary of GTE

Corp., and North American Philips Corp., have begun to market compact fluorescent bulbs that experts say may eventually replace incandes-cents in many of the most fre-rope, are an offshoot of the development of high-efficiency, rareearth phosphors, which allow fluorescent bulbs to be made smaller as well as to emit a spectrum of light almost identical to the warm hue of the standard incandescent. Phosphors are chemical compounds that convert ultraviolet light to visible light. The incandescent is not going to disappear," said Rudy Verderber, group leader for the lighting research program at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory. But in time, it will be replaced for the lighting research program at the lighting research program at the lighting that are forwardly left on for compact fluorescents in fixtures that are frequently left on for long periods, such as those outdoors and in hallways, he said. These bulbs "last longer and they are more efficient.

Compact fluorescents have an expected life span of 10,000 hours, 10 times that of an ordinary incandescent. Their only drawback, Mr. Verderber said, is that the initial cost is greater.

NOMPOSED of two thin tubes bridged by a connecting tube at the top, compact fluorescents carry a retail price of about $10, while an incandescent bulb can be bought in a supermarket for about 70 cents. To fit the compact fluorescent bulbs, which are pronged, into an ordinary socket, an adapter, costing an additional $10, is required. The adapter, which does not need to be replaced with the bulb, regulates the voltage.

John Hoffman, fluorescent-product manager at North American Philips Lighting Corp., which spearheaded the introduction of compact fluorescent bulbs in this country more than three years ago, estimated that two million compact fluorescent bulbs are sold in the United States annually. Compared with the almost two billion ordinary incandescent bulbs sold last year, the number of compact fluorescents is very small, he said, but growing.

"The response to the bulbs has been very good," he added.

Both incandescent and fluorescent light bulbs convert electrical energy into light, but they do so in entirely different ways. In an incandescent bulb, current heats a tungsten filament which glows white hot, releasing some of its energy in the form of

In a fluorescent bulb, a stream of electrons flows between electrodes sealed in both ends of a tube containing mert gases and mercury. The current vaporizes the mercury, which produces an arc stream that gives off ultraviolet light. A coating of phosphors in the tube converts the ultraviolet light to visible, white light This method of producing light is more efficient than that of filament bulbs; a four-foot fluorescent, for example, uses half the energy and emits almost twice the light as a 100-watt incandes-

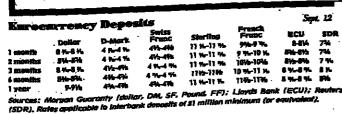

Developing a fluorescent bulb at once small enough and bright enough for household use was made possible by the discovery in the late 1970s of rare-earth phosphors, according to Alvin Hart, manager of application engineering at GE's lighting business group. Unlike ordinary phosphors, which break down when brought too close to the arc stream, rare-earth phosphors, which (Continued on Page 21, Col. 7)

Plastics Venture Discussed

ICI, Enichem Seek Economies

By Bob Hagerty
International Herald Tribune
LONDON — Imperial Chemical Industries PLC and Italy's state-owned Enichem SpA an-nounced Thursday that they are discussing formation of a joint venture to cut costs in making plastics.

The venture would mark a major advance in efforts to reduce overcapacity and losses in the European plastics and petrochemicals industry, analysts said.

Canada Pumps Money Into Its Sands

Development Of Oil-Bearing Deposits Pushed

By Douglas Martin
New York Times Service
CALGARY, Alberta — Unlike the United States, where Congress is talking about cutting off funds for synthetic fuels deoff funds for synthetic fuels de-velopment, Canada is pressing cautiously ahead with a number of efforts to develop its substantial oil-sands resources, poten-tially one of the largest synthetic-fuel endeavors anywhere.

"It is our ace in the hole," said John Zaozirny, energy minister of Alberta, the province that has most of Canada's I trillion barrels of oil in known oil-sands reserves. Some of the oil from those reserves is sold as is, but most of that extracted now is synthesized into a lighter, more conventional crude.

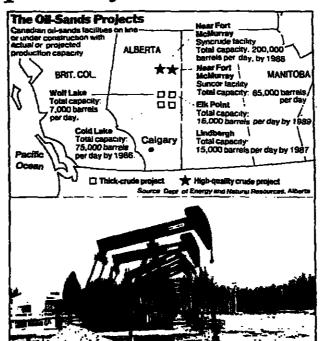

Mr. Zaozirny and industry officials say that even with today's eroding oil prices, many oilsands developments, with their low cost and enormous resources, make economic sense much more than coal gasification and oil-shale development make in the United States. With considerable help still available from the Canadian federal gov-ernment and at provincial level, they make even more sense.

Nonetheless, companies de-veloping oil sands — where extraction is more difficult because of the consistency of the oil are reacting to the lower price of oil by building projects in phases. A finished portion of an operation can then at least start producing crude.

Also, the final stage of "up-grading" extremely heavy oil into lighter crude is being postponed by most companies, partly because of a good market now among refineries in the northern United States for heavy crude.
"Has the developing and increasing uncertainty in the oil industry worldwide had any effect on the oil sands here?" asked Ralph Hedlin, an energy consultant in Calgary. "Unless people are absolutely nuts, the answer is crude's operation beyond the consortium's 20,000-barrel-aday addition to its 109,000-barrel-a-day plant in northern Alberta. He would like to bring capacity up to 200,000 barrels a

Canada's oil-sands effort comes at a time when similar efforts to tap exceptionally heavy oil reserves have ground to a halt in other countries. A drive to develop Venezuela's heavy oil reserves, for instance, has collapsed with oil prices.

The reasoning behind the Ca-nadian push is that technological improvements, favorable production costs and governmental help - largely in the form of reduced royalties and taxes argue for immediate develop-

Fiat Auto's Head Forecasts Pact With Ford in '85

FRANKFURT — The head of ing of car output would make Fiat Auto SpA, the Italian automaker, said Thursday that he expects talks with Ford Motor Co.'s European subsidiary to produce a definite agreement on cooperation between the two companies.

"There is going to be a definite agreement on some kind of deal between Fiat and Ford of Europe." Umberto Agnelli, chairman of Fiat Auto, the Fiat group's motor subsidiary, told reporters at an international motor show here. He did not elaborate.

"Discussions have identified a common objective but now it's up to the mother companies to go be-yond that," he said, adding that a statement would be issued by the end of the year. The companies previously had said it was too early to tell whether anything would result from top-le-vel talks that have involved the U.S.-based Ford parent.

In the past, company officials had said that they were discussing everything from limited cooperation to a full merger in Europe. Such a merger would create a giant with around 25 percent of the European vehicle market. Industry sources said the cooperation could go as far as joint development of a new car but would not involve a full merger. With design, manufacture and introduction of a new car series costing up to $1 billion, Ford and Fiat are aware that cooperation on a single model would make sense, the sources said.

One source said Fiat and Ford could, for example, develop a car combining characteristics of a Ford Capri with those of Lancia or Ferran models produced within the

Stocks Fall to a 2½-Month Low

NEW YORK — Stocks skidded to a broad loss for the third consecutive session Thursday, pushing the Dow Jones industrial average to a 214-month low.

Interest rate-sensitive financial issues came under notable pressure. Airline, retail, auto and telephone stocks also retreated.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 7.05 to 1,312.39, its lowest level since June 20, when it stood at 1,299.73. The average is off when it stood at 1,299.75. The average is of 23.30 points so far this week.

Losers swamped gainers by nearly 3-to-1 on the New York Stock Exchange, whose composite index lost 0.86 to 106.36. NYSE-listed issues hitting new 52-week lows outpaced those reaching new highs by 40-to-19.

Big Board volume totaled 107.07 million shares, against 100.38 million in the previous session.

Futures-related "sell programs" by brokerage firms, a key contributor to Wednesday's steep loss, initially abated Thursday but reappeared in late dealings, traders said.

Recently the prices of certain stock-index futures contracts have been selling at a discount to the indexes themselves. So the firms have been buying the futures and selling the indexes' underlying stocks to take advantage of the price spread.

Regardless, "the market's inability to rally when there are no programs is just as revealing as the selling generated by the programs," Newton D. Zinder, senior vice president of E.F. ICI said the West European petchemicals and plastics industry as a whole suffered losses of about £2 billion ($2.6 billion) a year from 1980 through 1982. An ICI spokesman said that the industry's results have improved since then but still show a net loss.

Despite its losses, ICI has pursized a strategy of being one of the major survivors in the PVC market, spartly because PVC is one product that is not expected to be made in large quantities at the new petrochemical plants in the Middle East. In 1981, ICI opened a new PVC plant in Wilhelmshaven, West Germany. The next year, ICI took over the PVC operations of Switzerland's Lonza AG. Also in 1982, ICI swapped its British polyethylene operations for British Petroleum Co.'s PVC manufacturing.

At present, ICI is losing about £50 million a year on PVC, Mr. Coates said. "The gamble doesn't really appear to have worked," he said. But, Mr. Coates added, the proposed joint venture would be a step in the right direction.

If you're in a commodity product, it's best to be as big as you can be," he observed.

For Enichem, the venture might provide better access to markets in northern Europe. Last year, Enichem began renting a plant in West Germany to produce low-density polyethylene, thus reducing transport costs for sales in northern Eu-lion, adding: "There are now signs that the measures taken over the past two years are beginning to have some effect."

Prudential said the rise of the pound reduced its overseas results after currency translations.

The latest figures include Fred S. James & Co., a U.S.-based brokerage recently acquired by Sedgwick from Transamerica Corp. for about £530 million in Sedgwick shares.

Excluding James, Sedgwick's pretax profit edged up to £53.3 million from £52.9 million. The company said the cost of hedging against foreign-exchange risks hurt results in the half.

Burmah Oil Posts 33.8% Profit Rise

LONDON - Burmah Oil PLC reported Thursday that pretax profit in the first half rose 33.8 percent, to £37.2 million ($48.4 million) from £27.8 million. Revenue fell to £787.4 million from £809.2 million in the first half of 1984.

The company said its main activities should benefit from satisfactory trading and economic conditions and improve on 1984's performance.

Progress has been made toward concentrating on the core interests of oil, Castrol lubricants, specialty chemicals and liquified natural gas transportation, it said. The company's restructuring program had continued with further cuts in tank-

LOS ANGELES — Insurers and lenders facing huge potential losses stemming from the financial prob-lems of a Virginia real estate investment company were to meet Thurs-day in Chicago to study a rescue plan proposed by Ticor Mortgage Insurance Co., which stands to lose the as much as $166 million.

The plan to be presented by Ti-cor, the privately held, Los Ange-les-based parent of Ticor Mortgage, aims to cut the group's losses significantly, according to Winston V. Morrow, the president and chief executive.

He said Wednesday that the plan would give insurers up to six years to resolve the problem, offering mortgage holders an alternative to writing off their entire investment.

Ticor's potential loss stems from defaults in payments on $1 billion in mortgages and mortgage-backed securities that it insured for Equity Programs investment Corp., a real estate syndication concern that has filed for protection under U.S. bankruptcy laws on behalf of its 341 limited partnerships.

State regulators have taken con-trol of EPIC and its parent, Community Savings & Loan Associa-tion of Bethesda, Maryland. Ticor Mortgage ceased writing new mortgage insurance policies Wednesday, but the company has not yet announced layoffs among its 350 employees.

Last week, Ticor split its profitable title insurance operation into a separate subsidiary to protect it from any financial fallout at the mortgage insurance unit. At the same time, the Federal National

From the archives of Magnum Photos, a photographic record of Europe in the immediate postwar years — striking images of a continent shaking off the debris of destruction and coming to life.

Mary Blume, the International Herald Tribune's distinguished feature journalist, sets the postwar scene and interviews many of the photographers in her introduction. The I.H.T. is pleased to present this unique volume that captures a decisive epoch and commemorates the work of some of the 20th century's master photojournalists.

Here you'll find some of the most famous images and faces of our time. Once you open its pages, you will want to spend hours poring over this magnificently produced collection. Truly this is a book to treasure for yourself, and a beautiful gift as well.

Available from the International Herald Tribune. Order today.

Dragonair Route Again Rejected

HONG KONG — The government of Hong Kong has again rejected an application by Dragonair to fly charter routes to Beijing and Shanghai. A statement Thursday said the application was premature because Britain and China are renegotiating an air accord. The talks ended this month without agreement. Dragonair, a Hong Kong airline with financial backing from China, applied for the charter routes in August. Dragonair officials called the first rejection. an unmasked effort to stille the airline's growth.

Cathay Pacific Airways has a license to operate scheduled flights to Beijing and Shanghai. Caledonian Far East Airways. also has expressed interest in the routes.

One satisfied participant was Roger Broederdorf, president of R.O. Broederdorf Inc., a company based in Lake in the Hills, Illinois, It specializes in industrial automa-

Hong Kong Bank Plans Rights Issue To Make Up for Balance-Sheet Deficit

of it in June, and that it planned a rights issue and capital reduction to make up the deficiency.

It said that an audit by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. showed that the bank lost 340.4 million dollars from July 1984 until the government takeover on June 7, 1985. The government took control of Hong Kong Industrial when it rescued Overseas Trust Bank, which owns 63.5 percent of Hong Kong Industrial 63.5 percent of Hong Kong Industrial.

HICB said the losses were mainly from increased provisions for nonperforming loans but did not specify the size of the provisions.

It said it hoped to raise 404.2 million dollars from the issuance of 408 million 10-percent noncumulative redeemable preference shares at par of one dollar each. Rights would entitle holders to four preference shares for each share held as of Sept. 26, 1985.

It said that Overseas Trust Bank would take up its entitlement of 259 million preference shares and that it had underwritten the balance at no cost to Hong Kong Industrial.

Canada Exploits Its Oil Sands

Although the big oil-sands producers are still the two mines, which together turn out about 175,000 barrels a day, a growing proportion of the basic tar-like crude called bitumen is being pumped to the surface of other oil sands using conventional wells after being softened with injections of steam. Production of bitumen alone is 55,000 barrels a day and is expected to triple in the next few years. Although the bitumen could be transformed into synthetic crude, as is done at the two existing oilsands mines, it currently is sold much as is, primarily to refiners in the northern United States.

The thick bitumen is mixed with tion of bitumen and condensate natural-gas condensate, a thinner can then be sold for nearly $25 a crude-like liquid, and sent to the

THE IMAGE AND OTHER STO-RIES

By Isaac Bashevis Singer. 310 pages. Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 19 Union Square

West, New York, N. Y. 10003. Reviewed by Janet Hadda

HOW can Isaac Bashevis Singer, a United States resident for half a century, continue to bring alive the vanished realm of Yiddish-speaking Eastern European Jewry? What need he do to represent his current existence without abandoning his mission, both self-imposed and pressed upon him from without of describing the milieu he left behind in 1935?
The Image and Other Stories, his latest collection, provides some clues to this quest for a balance between artistic independence and literary responsibility.

Over the years. Singer has turned with steady and increasing regularity to a belletris-tic version of himself: a Yiddish writer who, functioning as a screen, reflects the adventures of others. Almost half the works in the present volume are of this type. The narrator lives in contemporary New York, but his visitors transport him back to the Old Country. Warsaw, Lublin or a small Polish village. As if they had known him forever, they reveal the mysteries of their lives to him.

The nameless anecdotist of "The Secret," for example, pours out her misery over the fact that her illegitimate daughter is unwittingly about to marry her father. A dentist calls on the narrator of "A Telephone Call on Yom Kippur" to regale him with an account of his ease discovery that his favorite lover, long supposed by him to be dead, is alive -if not well — in Los Angeles.

The narrator is consistent from one story to the next and bears a strong resemblance to the public Singer: He hails from Warsaw, lives on Manhattan's Upper West Side, astounds his devotees by continuing to list his number in the telephone directory, is a vegetarian and exerts a peculiar magnetism on women.

Above all, this fictionalized Yiddish author craves stories. The individuals confiding in their listener have been mad with love, or lust; they struggle with issues of faith and ultimate meaning. He, on the other hand, is hungrier for tales than for sex or truth and will push everything else aside in order to hear someone else's experience. They need him because he is recep-because his passion is story-collecting. There is an urgency about this volume. Readers familiar with Singer's previous work may be surprised to notice that, just as there has been a dramatic expansion of the narrator as Yiddish author in the current pages, there is a virtual disappearance of supernatural phenomena — wandering souls, demons, communications nication from beyond the grave. Singer's post-Holocaust characters, and Singer himself, presumably are too busy with the imponderables of ordinary life to devote themselves to the occult. A pious man is suddenly and the substitution of the sub dealy seduced by his sister-in-law ("A Nest Egg for Paradise"): two lifelong enemies real-ize the error of their ways ("The Litigants"); a young woman is so obsessed with being right that she ruins her life rather than admit a misjudgment ("The Mistake"). Inevitably a sis shift has freed Singer, or compelled him, to look at the internal, irrational forces that drive people to the mental and bodily extremes that he returns to in his writings.

Sometimes this power may be perceived as a perverse version of God's hand, as when the storyteller of "Miracles" decides that it is possible for God to help him commit adultery, since He may also have been capable of abetting Nazi atrocities. On other occasions, the impulse is clearly psychological. The mother of the narrator in "The Image," for instance, puts it succinctly on the final page of the title story and the book: "This image was not a demon.

A dybbuk talks, screams, howis, wails, and therefore he can be exorcised. Melancholy is silent, and therein lies its uncanny power."

and therefore he can be exorcised. Melancholy is silent, and therein lies its uncanny power.

For Singer, at this juncture, the greatest internal mechanism is the miracle of memory. There, as in dreams, death can be surmounded. When the characters who inhabit these pages begin to recall the events that have enlarged and embellished their lives, the destruction of and embellished their lives, the destruction of Eastern European Jewry is temporarily healed. When Singer spins a yarn narrated by Aunt Yentl, or tells of an incident that may have occurred in his father's rabbinical court, a silent world again calls out to the reader.

Although Singer comments in his author's note that a writer should never abandon his native tongue, it is essential for his purpose that "The Image and Other Stories" be an English volume, with many of its stories translated alone or in collaboration, by the author using a Yiddish-accented, homey English. This is the only way Singer's Eastern European Jewish world has a chance of remaining alive. through those who read English and those who will use the translated version to render his work into other, less accessible languages.

If many of the stories in this volume are thin, episodes and individuals flitting across the pages, it is because Singer wants to comily to paper every possible vision of his heritage? The narrator of "Confused," a Yiddish author, confides that he always tells his female admirers:
"When you happen to visit New York City, come to see me if I'm-still alive." Singer, supremely aware of death and the consequent obliteration of his vibrant past, is racing against time to ensure that when he is gone, Aunt Yentl and all the rest will have entered the memories and souls of others...

Rose Succeeds: 'The Big Knock' Breaks Cobb's Long Record for Hits

The younger Rose had hit fungos to the Reds during infield practice and warmed up his father with a game of catch outside the Reds' durout before the game. Now, his father wiped tears from his eyes.

What Rose has called "The Big Knock" had finally come. Although he tripled in his last at bat, and scored both runs in the game the Reds won, 2-0, the triple was a far lesser blow.

On the other hand, few, if any, would deny that Rose is a finer person than the violent and virtually friendless Cobb. If Cobb has lived in lore as the game's best all-around player and perhaps its worst all-around man, Rose has been an emblem of light throughout his career.

Again Wednesday night, Rose chatted with fans, teammates, umpires, writers, TV crews, grounds crewmen and all the other denizens of Rose, strong and indestructible with his thick trunk and stocky legs, has lacked most of the game's more glamorous skills: speed afoot, a strong throwing arm or even the power to hit home runs. But he worked. He proved that the more he worked, the more be could work. While others' skills faded in their 30s, he batted .325 and led the league in hits when he was 40, played every day until he was 41 and, this season, at 44, has the fifth-best on-base percentage in the National League.

Before this game, Rose was asked if he could explain his almost-superhuman energy, his abil-ity to sleep five hours or less a night and yet outwork men half his age.

Umpire Lee Wever, who was behind the plate, got a particular thrill out of seeing Rose break the mark, and it was the second time Weyer had worked a game in which a record fell, The Associated Press reported.

Weyer, who came into the NL in 1962, a year before Rose, had umpired at third base in the 1974 game in which the Atlanta Braves' Hank Aaron hit his 715th home run to top Babe Ruth. "I told him three, four, five years ago that I was going to be behind the plate when he broke it," Weyer said.

The edict, announced after a special meeting of the league manage-ment committee, comes in the wake of widespread violence at matches at home and abroad last season.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had demanded that a national identity-card system be introduced for all spectators at all 92 clubs in the four divisions of professional soccer in England.

Clubs initially balked at the suggestion, maintaining it was impractical and expensive.

Thursday's meeting considered a working party report. It then agreed to the a compromise involving only First and Second Division clubs and restricting seating.

Sale of Churchill Downs Sought

LOUISVII.LE, Kentucky (UPI) — Churchill Downs' directors voted Wednesday to hold off responding to a $46 million bid by a Florida horseman, Louis E. Wolfson, to buy the home of the Kentucky Derby. The track's president, Thomas H. Meeker, said the directors did not feel compelled to take any action either in favor or against Wolfson. A track official said previously that Churchill Downs would oppose the bid.

I have a typewriter that is mostly plastic and rubber bands. Between us, it is an infuriating piece of junk, but you won't catch me saying so, and if anybody else does, I'm likely to reply. "So you're one of those uresome elitisis who are always putting the knock on plastic, eh?"

Not long ago I heard myself denouncing somebody for saying a television show called "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" was vulgar and trashy. Americans have al-ways enjoyed vulgar trash, I said. What could be healthier than the whole darned country sitting by the TV set enjoying some good, inno-

Then, to put the boot into this critic of "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," I said, "People like you would rather see the whole country reading Virginia Woolf instead of having a little harmless entertain-

This was a neat way of calling the poor devil an "elitist," as I knew too well, having had the trick pulled on me many years ago after telling a small audience that when it came to comic strips, "Rex Morgan, M.D." was not even in the same league with "Li'l Abner." "Sure," some coarse Voice of the

Naturally, I would not say this aloud nowadays; it would sound too "elitist." Come to think of it, though, what is so salt-of-the-earth about having your life "styled"?

As with so many other aspects of modern life, the struggle to avoid charges of elitism is a reaction against recent history. For most of the century the terrible words that made people sound despicable were "middle-class."

From the age of Harding to the dawn of Reaganism, it was a dreadful judgment to hear one say, "so middle-class — you're so hopeless-ly middle-class." The party thus denounced was made to feel despicable because of the implication that he hadn't the discrimination necessary to disdain shoddiness, avoid plastic and stay out of the clutches of quacks exploiting the gullible who believe that life, like a TV weatherman's hair, can be

Stevie Wonder and 'the Clock of Now'

By Robert Hilburn

Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES — You get an idea of how hard Stevie Wonder works on his music when you listen to him describe the thought he puts into selecting his album titles. Rather than naming the album after one of the collection's most appealing songs. Wonder wants his titles to represent the direction and tone of his records.

Wonder, 35, said "In Square Circle" was chosen as the title of his newly released album to suggest the complexities and ironies of human experience.

"Take the album itself — the cover is square, but the record itself is a circle," he said. "But also the world is round even though it is based off in squares — with north, east, south and west. In the West, most buildings are built in the square form, but a lot of the African buildings of old are built in the circular form.

"There is also the need to pay careful attention to things because they often are not what they seem. Some of the songs talk about this. You have many people these days who try to convince you that they are acting in God's name — as if he okays what they are doing. But they are actually just using the creator's name to justify their own selfish motives.

"Take the apartheid song on the album. That's a perfect example of a government that says it acts in God's name."

The song — "It's Wrong (Apartheid)" — speaks to rulers and oppressed blacks in South Africa. The album version of the song ends with an expression of hope to the latter:
"Freedom is coming... hold on tight."

The song will be extended on the still-unreleased 12-inch single and on the compact-disc version of the album to include this warning to South African officials: The clock of now says it's time

For you to make up your mind Before it's too late for you To earn your redemption.

Wonder has had a steady series of hits in recent years, including "Master Blaster (Jammin')" in 1980 and "That Girl" in 1982, and he won an Academy Award for "I Just Called to Say I Love You" from the film "The Woman in Red."

Still, he maintained something of a low profile in the 1980s after establishing himself in the 1970s as one of the most gifted and acclaimed figures of modern pop. His domi-nance was highlighted in the mid-1970s when three consecutive Wonder albums won bestalbum Grammys: "Innervisions," "Fulfillingness' First Finale" and "Songs in the Key

Although the album that followed, the sound track for the documentary "Journey Through the Secret Life of Plants," was an exquisite musical statement, its esoteric design was not what the public or the industry was expecting, and it was widely viewed as a disappointment. Still, the two-record set is such matters as the difficulty of Vietnam likely to stand as one of Wonder's top

While the follow-up, "Hotter Than July," was generally admired and sold well, it did not catch the pop imagination the way his earlier work had. The sound track to Gene Wilder's comedy "The Woman in Red" was a mostly light-hearted sidestep.

Wonder sees the new album as the start of his most ambitious series of albums since the 1970s trilogy. "This is the first of a group of three albums," he said. "Some of the songs will deal with relationships and love, some with political themes and social issues, and some just with religious beliefs and concepts.

There is an exuberance and grace to the best songs in the new album that echo the mbition and confidence of the early work.
Wonder, a participant in the "We Are the World" recording session for African famine aid, is one of many artists who are helping restore a sense of social consciousness to pop. Unlike some of them, however, he is no

ewcomer to social commentary, although his importance as a commentator in pop is often overlooked because he puts his thoughts into such a melodic and accessible

A classic example was "You Haven't Done Nothin." one of the most scathing attacks of the 1970s on governmental indifference toward the disadvantaged — backed by a vigor-ous, danceable tune. Other songs touched on veterans in readjusting to life at home; one song called for a national holiday in memory of Martin Luther King.

Because of that number, "Happy Birthday," Wonder was associated with the drive to honor the memory of King, and he was thrilled when Congress voted to establish the third Monday in January, effective next year, as a national holiday. (King's birthday was Jan. 15.) Wonder was in the U.S. Senate gallery with Coretta King, the widow of the slain civil rights leader, and her son on the day in 1983 that the bill passed.

Wonder is encouraged by the upswing of social awareness and responsibility among pop artists.

"I think it took a long time for people to get over the disillusionment of losing such very great people," he said, referring to the assassi-nations of King and John F. Kennedy. The memory of the 1960s, Wonder said, had somewhat faded until recently. "The younger generation, black and white, didn't know a lot about the struggle that had gone on," he said. "They took for granted a lot of the advances that were made.

"That may be why so many young people today have such a conservative attitude. The interesting thing is that a lot of the momentum for this renewal is coming from people my age, people who grew up in the '60s and did see what happened. A lot of these people
